For use in multisync monitors. Doesn't appear to be useful for overlay on a composite NTSC (or PAL) video signal.

Various vendors make chips for use in televisions, which also are mostly not suitable, since they overlay onto RGB.

It looks like composite video overlay chips may be extinct.

Once you have the OSD, overlaying it is relatively easy. Look at the Elantec EL2090C, which is a DC restoration amp for video, and the EL4094C, a linear mixer.

The inimitable styling and lyrics of Raoul Xemblinosky are revealed in an early effort called "Roger Wiseman's Greyhound Men's Room Band", and really should not have been blocked by the RIAA. I suggest that you go to http://extra.newsguy.com/~shpxurnq/songs.html#song5 and review the lyrics.

To find the average square value of a sine wave of amplitude "A", you can write the problem down as finding the average value of either

or of

over one cycle of the sine wave. If you look in a trig identity table, you'll see that (sin wt)^2 is identical to (1/2) - (cos 2wt)/2, and that the average value is therefore 1/2, because the cosine portion averages out to zero.

The mean square amplitude is therefore given by (A^2)/2.

And that means root mean square (rms) amplitude is given by A/sqrt(2).

If rms = A/sqrt(2), then A = rms*sqrt(2).

To find the peak value of a sine wave (or A) when you know its rms value, you must therefore multiply by the square root of two.

But what is the square root of two? Is it 1.414?

No. That is only a short approximation, because the square root of two is an endless string of non-repeating digits. Fortunately, modern calculators find the square root of any number to more digits than they can display, and you can use the square root key to obtain a value which is the best your calculator can do. If you multiply by that value, you will obtain the best result possible for A.

So suppose rms = 120 and you want to know A to five significant digits. You key in 120, multiply it by the square root of two, and your calculator comes up with 169.70563 because it can only display 8 digits. How do you correctly round it to five digits?

Convention has it that you keep the first five digits (169.70) and then look at the next digit (the "5"). If it is greater than or equal to five, you add one to the rightmost digit of the number which you kept. Otherwise, you simply leave what you have alone. According to that rule, the rounded value is 169.71.

Suppose that you only want to keep three digits? You would keep 169 and then look at the next digit (the "7"). That digit is obviously greater than or equal to five, so you add one to what you have kept and you would come up with a value of 170.

And that is precisely what the FCC did when they formulated the Extra Class exam question.

It is also precisely what KC8JBO and others have failed to do when they gave their answers. In fact, one of the posters apparently isn't knowledgable about rounding numbers at all.

It is left as an exercise for the reader to explain why 1.414 is good enough to find the peak value of 120 V rms to three digits (170), but is not a good enough root to find the peak value to five digits (169.71).

Here in Texas, even the grade schoolers can explain it.

It was novel for about 10 minutes, then it was redundant.
The original "Porkbutt Song" cassette tape was allegedly one of the tapes that R.H. ordered Big Al to cut up in pieces when he paid him a visit... Darn shame as Big Al could have probably put that tape up for auction on the ham radio ad's groups on E-Bay and got not less than $75.00 for it. I understand that one of WA4D's infanous
"Outside the Laurel FCC with the Flag" QSL cards went for $50.00 as a "collectors piece" out in the flea market in Dayton 2000...

K5BLB is BACK ON THE AIR!
You can catch him on 14.313 in the afternoons sometimes esp on weekends...

Haven't heard him on 75 as the 3950 Liberty Net is for all intensive purposes, defunct and DOA. (they don't even get to use 3.950 anymore as a new group is on there Sat nite)

> Oh, so you helped Walter Miller, Lllllllardasssssssssss Lllllllloyd.....

Uncle Walter had the BEST audio I've ever heard on 75 Meter SSB.
I often wonder what happened to his old gear and his German Marching Music collection. I remember when he'd fire up his "goombfstopper marches" and go on and on for hours at a time at all hours. He sure knew how to blow all the nitnoids off of the frequency with his 30+ dB over s-9 signal and high-fidelity audio. (it was rumored Walter used a professional Seinhauser microphone - wow! I wonder where that mic is now...??)

Truly ham radio has lost a giant when W2YEE went SK - we miss him : (

What is "tiomes"? Learn to spell 2test

It didn't take 34 times to pass the General, > you ignorant fuck. Only ONE. Can you say the same? Didn't think so.

2test not only passed it once, but then had to take it again at the request of the FCC. We only had to pass it once 2test. Can you say the same? Didn't think so.

2455. Question about microwave hamming

I recently salvaged the transformers, caps, and "ray guns" out of 2 discarded microwave ovens. If I welded a couple of plate-steel feedhorns for these babies, would there be a way to tweak them into 2.3 gig xmit finals? It'd be a shame to just throw them out...

Oh? Did The Fat Boy mess up again? The Old Milwaukee made him do it. Or was it a case of Red, White, and Blue on sale for ten bucks a pop? Cheap beer for cheap folks.
You'd think that a $90,000 per year "computer engineer" would be able to purchase something more refined than his usual swill. WalMart sells Iron City at a discount.
Of course one would also surmise that a $90,000 per year income would be more than enough to allow this "degreed" engineer to leave his rented hovel and purchase a home of his own. After all, who wants to live within 20 feet of a major highway? Those diesel fumes wafting into the house day after day must be upsetting.
Of course those same fumes may be beneficial. They probably cover up a lot of bad odors given off by the unsanitary residents and may even help keep cockroaches away.

It was novel for about 10 minutes, then it was redundant.
The original "Porkbutt Song" cassette tape was allegedly
one of the tapes that R.H. ordered Big Al to cut up in pieces when he paid him a visit... Darn shame as Big Al could have probably put that tape up for auction on the ham radio ad's groups on E-Bay and got not less than $75.00 for it. I understand that one of WA4D's infanous
"Outside the Laurel FCC with the Flag" QSL cards went for $50.00 as a "collectors piece" out in the flea market in Dayton 2000...

2468. UDP Logger for Linux

Newsgroup: rec.radio.amateur.misc
Date: 2002-02-23 13:16:20 UTC

Source record: 80010

This post is in response to Frag's request, since he didn't include a valid email address. It contains the C source code for udplog.c, as updated by me, and should be compilable on any Linux box, for use on a LAN, with the line

gcc -O -o udplog -DDAEMON -DNOBROADCAST udplog.c

You will have to run it as root in order to be able to grab a raw socket. Take a look at the source code for details.

* UDP Logger, based on the iplogger package (specifically tcplog.c) by:
*
* IpLogger Package
* Mike Edulla
* medulla@infosoc.com
*
* Modified by Psionic Alpha
* psionic@darklight.com
* Tue Jan 13 00:12:54 EST 1998
*
* Modified further by Stagger Lee
* Apr 23, 2001 as follows:
*
* (a) Modified to run in foreground unless compiled with DAEMON defined.
* That allows the user to use it as a temporary udp logger which can still * be interrupted easily from a controlling terminal. Also enabled it to * ignore (presumed) local broadcast packets if NOBROADCAST is defined.
* (b) Added code to read the contents of /etc/resolv.conf, searching for up to
* three nameserver entries, rather than using the NAMESERVERIP method from
* the original code. If /etc/resolv.conf is missing or can't be read, the
* udplogger doesn't perform the name server tests, but continues to run.
* (c) Packets from 127.0.0.1 are now ignored.
* WARNING: The following notes are retained only for historical completeness.
* They may not be correct for this version of udplog.
* Note (1), for example, is no longer true.
* (SLee@houston-hunks.com)
* NOTES: (1) The define NAMESERVERIP is used to filter out all requests that
* go to whatever your most common name server is, as they are truely
* annoying and really there is no need to log them. If you have need,
* just change it to something silly like "DONTSCANME", or anything else,
* that isn't an IP address, because its only doing a strcmp for a match.

* (2) UDP logging is probably only for the truely paranoid. There is
* udp packets that are always flying around, because as far as I can * tell, the UDP protocol isn't streamed like TCP. By this I mean,
* a TCP connection will connect on a port, and send data back and forth * and eventually close, all with one connection. A UDP connection will * open a connection, send a packet, then close it. Open a connection,
* send a packet, then close it. What does this mean to you?
* ALOT of logging going on.
* (3) You can NOT do a gethostbyname, or anything else, to determine * what the hostname of the IP that made the connection. Why? because
* the nameservice uses UDP packets. When you go to look up the IP, * the name server will send it back on a UDP packet, you'll log that,
* go to look up the IP of the name server that sent the UDP packet,
* etc, etc, and get into an infinite loop with your name server. BAD!
* (4) I've set the default openlog facility to LOG_LOCAL3, as I use
* uselog to dump everything from local3 into its own log file. You * can change this to whatever you like, or change it back to LOG_DAEMON,
* to have it sent to your default messages file.
* (5) I have ONLY tried this on a linux 2.0.33 box, and while this * should be portable to any OS that the original iplogger package
* was, I have no way of verifying it.
* (6) I attempted to contact the original author of the tcplog.c
* package, but the E-Mail address was no longer valid.
* (7) I'm extremely busy, I made this for myself and am only releasing
* it because I havn't seen any other UDP loggers around. I will not * provide tech support, or anything else of that nature. If you find
* a serious bug, you can e-mail me at the above address, but otherwise
* I probably won't respond. (And I definately won't be adding anything * else to it).

Back in prison we used to sing this song. It was about my Cell mate Woger Wiseman. It goes something like this:

WELL THE SOUTH SIDE OF GLEN DALE IS THE FAGGOT SIDE OF TOWN AND IF YOU GO DOWN THERE YOU BEST BEWARE OF A PUNK NAMED WOGER WISEMAN

NOW WOGER IS A FAGGOT STAND ABOUT 5 FOOT FOUR
ALL THE DOWNTOWN JOHNS CALL HIM LOOSE SPHINCTER LOVER HIS MOTHER CALL HIM 'HOE

CHORUS AND IT'S BAD BAD WOGER WISEMAN
THE BADDEST PUNK IN THE WHOLE CELL BLOCK
BADDER THAN RICHARD SIMMONS AND FATTER THAN NAT KING COLE

NOW WOGER HE'S A PUSSY AND HE LIKES HIS PURPLE CLOTHES
HE LIKES TO WEAR HIS FISHNET HOSE, UNDER EVERYONE'S NOSE
HE GOT CUSTOM PINK PANTIES
HE GOT A FRENCH TICKLE TOO
HE GOT A 32 INCH DILDO IN HIS POCKET FOR FUN
A VIBRATOR IN HIS SHOE

(REPEAT CHORUS)

NOW FRIDAY 'BOUT A WEEK AGO
WOGER SUCKIN' DICK AND AT THE END OF THE YARD
SAT A BROTHER NAMED BINKIE AND OO THAT GUY LOOKED NICE WELL HE CAST HIS EYES UPON HIM AND THE TROUBLE SOON BEGAN CAUSE WOGER LEARNED A LESSON
BOUT MESSIN' WITH A PUNK OF A JEALOUS BITCH

WELL THE PUNKS TOOK TO BITCH SLAPPIN' AND WHEN THEY PULLED THEM FROM THE BED
ROGER'S LARD ASS LOOKED LIKE A BLOODY PUZZLE

WITH AN EXTRA HOLE!

(REPEAT CHORUS)

It's obviously SPAM since it's followed up to all sorts of groups that don't care!

Somewhere (I think it was on the eQSL site) I saw where you had to have the card mailed from eQSL (at a buck a card). Seemed to me exactly like the sort of thing the League would dream up. Still, a buck is better than 3 IRCs.

In any case, you're right. If it were the case, there would be something on the ARRL site. The last mention I could see was a year ago where the league was working with a software vendor to provide a secure eQSLing service.

Recall some months ago when somebody did a "drive-by" on Dimmy's house?
Somebody with a paintball gun popped his hovel. Dimmy went ballistic and ran to his old T-bird to chase the culprits but the car automatically pulled into the liquor store (habit) and the chase was off.
Oh, well. His little red house needs painting anyway. Fumigation would probably help too.

What's the difference? Ain't nothin' "historical" about this announcement.
What the ARRL (may have) said is that they will accept the (e)QSLs that are mailed. I fail to see the difference between a mailed QSL that had been verified and printed by a QSL manager and a mailed eQSL that had been verified and printed by the eQSL service.

Wogie proves yet again that he is W4AMP's lap dog. It doesn't take much to get Roger to dance. Now he is letting AMP manipulate him like the puppet he is. Dance, Roger. Dance. Get smart. Let AMP do his own dirty work. Or is he too cowardly? He can't afford to be kicked off another ISP. He's running out of them.

That is just like AMP. Get some dolt to do his dirty work for him. He sure has Roger's number.

Roger...how stupid are you?

Tell us, Roger. Do you and AMP spend hour after hour trying to figure out who is who and who is posting what on these newsgroups? It must drive you super sleuths nuts.

And you bitch because we do not post our calls or email addresses? Get real, Mysterion 2001. We should post our calls so Dimmy can send us magazine subscriptions? So Dimmy can make hang-up phone calls at three a.m.? So we can peek from behind our living room curtains like you do?

Roger...Dimmy is mentally disturbed. He is a stalker. He is a user. And you are falling for his line. Of course in your case it seems that like minds travel in the same circles. You are both mentally disturbed.

Brother John has been to the mountain. He has seen the Light. Don't believe it? Just ask him.
How is it that this alleged Christian justified playing music and jamming? I guess he crossed himself, made a good Act Of Contrition, begged his God to forgive him and jammed on. What a good Christian Preacher John is.

The Lib Nuts were out and about on 3941 this morning. Typical Bush Bashing. WB8RAV bashed Bush and was rebutted by N9PGE. Did not catch first names for either. RAV became enraged and called names. Guess he disliked being told he was wrong. RAV told PGE that he had proof positive that what he was saying was true...RAV claimed that Bush was downsizing our military. When RAV was questioned he went berserk and used foul language. He over reacted. Guess the dude disliked what he heard. PGE said he was a veteran and WAV went nuts, saying that being a veteran didn't count. WAV allowed that he'd never been in the military.
Vic restored peace and changed the topic.
All in all, the Lib Nut group is just that...nut cases.
Ya gotta laugh at them...

I want to cut the high-frequency response of a pair of mid-quality closed-cup stereo headphones I use for CW operating. I'd like to reduce the 'phones response above 8 KHz or so. I have used in the past true "communications" grade headphones with response cutting sharply off in the 7-10 KHz range, so I know what a tremendous benefit they can be for extended operating compared with phones made for listening to music with an 18-22 KHz upper cutoff. Much of the QRN, especially on 20 meters and above, is above 8 KHz. Getting rid of it is like dropping the weight of a backpack on an uphill hike.

I remember, dimly, reading somewhere that you can cut hi-freq. response by adding a capacitor across the two headphone leads. Am I correct in my recollection? If so, does the type of cap matter [i.e. ceramic, mylar, mica, etc.]? While I know that a bit of trial-and-error substitution probably will be involved here, what general value should I be looking at trying? Finally, exactly how should the cap be wired into the 'phone circuit? I think I remember reading that you simply solder one cap lead to each of the two phone wires, but please confirm/correct this. Thanks.

If I owned a dog, I'd name it Roger.
Why?
Because Roger likes to sniff assholes.
Why else?
Because Roger likes to lick those assholes.
What would my dog and Roger have in common?
Easy answer.
They have both licked the same assholes at one time or another.
The difference is that my dog refuses to lick an asshole that Roger has been to first.
Even lowly dogs have their pride.

This guy is dangerous, he is one of those take matters into your own hands type.
I have heard his broadcasts and they are strange. Why doesn't Ham Radio have a 15 minute maximum broadcasts per week rule. I can only see more people like him getting licensed and turning ham radio into a shortwave radio service.

I am looking for someone who could scan a few pages from a Radio Shack HTX-212 manual. I need the schematics for the radio and microphone and they are no longer available through Radio Shack customer service. I bought a used HTX-242 but it came with the microphone from an HTX-212, and there is a slight difference between the two mics because none of the scan or direct entry functions will work. I did some substitution troubleshooting and have determined that my radio and mic are both ok, they just donï¿½t match each other. Radio Shack was able to provide the pinout identification for the connector and the only obvious difference is that the radios provide different voltages to the mic, so I am hoping to be able to compare schematics and find the internal difference and make my mic work on my radio. I have only been able to find two HTX-212s locally, and neither ham has the manual, so if anyone could help me out I would really appreciate it.

Four days ago I transferred money to eQSL to fund a postage account to print and mail QSLs. Sent the money via Paypal and my call was clearly on the transaction. The money never shows up in my account and an email to eQSL has gone unanswered. Anyone else experience this? How long does it take to credit the account? You would think this would be automated. QSLs are automated, why can't their system automatically post the payments. I wish the ARRL would handle this stuff instead of a few volunteers. When you are talking about a lot of money to acquire QSLs for awards I'd rather give the money to a full time paid staff that represents all U.S. amateurs and our interests. JMHO

http://dimensional.com/~melissa/mrf138.htm

Some people are asking $75-125 each for them.

But we could use a new hard drive and some software for the house, so if I wanted to sell them fairly soon, how much could I reasonably expect to get for them? Maybe $50 each if someone takes the whole lot of them?

I've been told my fellow hams are too cheap when it comes to this kind of thing, but they're the ones most likely to build things with these, right?

Right... Don't join. When they come to take away your frequencies, your operating privileges and eventually your entire hobby, just lock yourself with a couple of buddies in a shack in Montana and make an armed stand-off against the feds.

A typical CB mentality if I've ever seen one.

I doubt that. With so many internet radio stations, it's easier to set up a broadcast on live365.com or some other web radio venue rather than use shortwave in the amatuer bands. Internet broadcasts have more of a chance being heard since more people have computers and net access than have shortwave receivers.

Sid the Lid was on 14313 for 2 hours this afternoon

Hello Pete,
Yes I sure do! Morse Tutor Gold will do that and a lot more. While learning CW myself I tried several freeware - and - commercial CW software tutor programs. Morse Tutor Gold is the Cadillac of all of them IMHO. Here is the link to their homepage and from there you can order.

GGTE Amateur Radio Software
http://www.ggte.com/

It is also available through HRO outlets and the ARRL organization....good luck. Morse Tutor Gold took me well past 20wpm with great ease and flexibility in lesson structure....

This month's Scientific American had an article on using power lines for LAN connections. When I saw that they had broken the 4-20MHz spectrum up into 84 wideband channels it really raised my eyebrows. Sounded like a great opportunity to QRM almost all the HF bands. And are we really going to get on our neighbors case because their computer is keeping us off 40 though 15?

But then I read a little further. They blocked out the ham bands from their frequency plan. Seems they knew the League would be all over them like a cheap suit. Looks like they learned a lesson from the RFID crowd. Not clear who is going to win that one yet, but the League has kept them from wrecking 440 for several years now.

Based on your eBay experience I would expect around $5 each....

The 28V operation is a problem for most common ham applications. They can be used, but they would not be the first choice for many applications.

Obsolete devices tent to be very expensive but this

Buy a nice new hard drive and go to www.linux.org to see how you can get lots of very good software for free.

The market will decide how much they are worth. You will either have to accept the going rate or hold on to them in the hope that you will get a better offer. I'm a keen homebrewer and I certainly wouldn't pay 50, 25 or even 10 dollars for them. Sorry! that's probably not what you wanted to hear.

Hi,
I know exactly what you mean! It was the EM80 in my father's radio in the late 1950s which made me want to know what it was and how it worked, which got me into this whole electronics thing. :-)

Gee, just two here. One for the am/fm, one for the vhf/uhf dualband rig.
Oh wait, there's still the bottom end of a k-40 on the trunk too, should I snap the antenna back on??..lol On a side note, anyone ever check the resonance of a k-40 on 70cm?.. might be my experiment for the day.

I currently have 6 on my Nissan Pick'em up.. One on the front for the am/fm radio, one on the back bumper for my CB (hardly ever use it, put it on long before I got into ham). 4 on top, one a 2m whip, one a 10m hamstick, one 2m/440 antenna for my HT, and one for my scanner.

I also put my call sign on the rear sides of my camper shell and back bumper in 3 inch high stick on letters (sold for address markers in hardware stores).

Makes for some interesting conversations, and lets me talk about Ham to interested folks. Sort of a rolling advertisement.

2574. ILLEGAL SALE OF HAM RADIOS?

What do you think?

Should Radio Shack and other electronic retailers be allowed to sell amateur radios to individuals who do not have an amateur radio license? This is a growing problem around the country, and now here is your chance to voice your opinions.

No License? No Radio!

Geesh, grow the F up! What do you want? Papers? Where are your PAPERS!! Photo IDs? 7 day waiting periods? On line verification of a license before sale? Give me a break!

I bought my Swan 500C as incentive to get my Novice ticket. BEFORE I had any HAM license at all. I got the Swan, listened to my friends, and practiced listening to code. Finally got my ticket.

I bought my Kenwood TR-2400 as incentive to get my Tech license.
BEFORE I had privileges on 2M. Listening to 2M gave me the bug to get off my butt and over to Dallas to take the test for upgrade.

My Alinco DR-590 dual-bander for my car was a birthday gift from my wife, who DIDN'T have a ticket. You're little Gestapo tactics would rule out anyone buying a radio as a gift.

I had decided (but actually didn't buy it) to get a K2 as my incentive to get back into CW and upgrade. Opps, should I not be allowed to buy a radio out of class?

Little people with little minds making a big agenda to control anyone they can, any way they can. And when they can't build themselves up, they try to put anyone else into a lower class. Hey, it's all relative.

This kind of 'attitude' makes me be ashamed to be associated with some HAMs. The 'little' people who just have to be controlling of anyone they can, and make a big thing out of nothing... I had a boss one time like that. Managed by putting the people under him under his thumb. Didn't last long...

Okay, you dumb F -- see how stupid that looks.

Come to Lansing Michigan and see how long it takes for you to change your mind. CBers walk right into Radio Shack, buy their mobile radios illegally and start jamming our repeaters. But maybe you want that.

By the way, next time you send a post, why not try using your real email address. Your pathetic attempt to hide your identity only discredits your argument.

1) A retailer is not the police (including the FCC).

2) Such an action may preclude surprise gifts for amateurs from their unlicensed family, relatives, or friends.

3) Even if purchased by a licensed amateur, there's no guarentee that he didn't actually buy it on behalf of an unlicensed individual or for immediate resale to one.

They should mention that a license is required and perhaps "push their book" and the local test session if they find the purchaser is unlicensed and the item is not a gift for someone who is.

Well, are YOU that stupid? It's pretty easy to find out who I am.
I mean, I DO post with my real name. If you want my email address, it's easy enough to find. The 'joe@user.com' is just what HP leaves in the envelope when you buy their machines and don't change the default. In fact, in all the years I've been on the internet, (and the old usenet demand thing before that) you're the first person that's ever even voiced the idea that I was trying to hide my identity.

Or do you think it's ok for you to doctor yours with 'nospam' and that's the only acceptable way of doing things?

Like I said, small minds want to control all they can...

You discredit yourself, I don't need to do anything more..

My argument and assessment of you and your idea still stands.

Well, I don't think that a retail outlet can not sell radios to anyone who will pay for them. I don't think it is illegal to own one without a license.

Now, it is definitely illegal to transmit without a license.

Many hams routinely stage "fox hunts". This sounds like a really great opportunity to have one. If the miscreant is jamming the repeater, have a fox hunt, and track 'em down. Sounds like fun to me. Gather your evidence, hand it over to the authorities, and let 'em rip.

Do you think gun shops should be able to sell guns to people who might use them to commit crimes? Get real! Many, many prospective hams buy a transceiver to give them an incentive to get their licenses.
Do you want to discourage prospective hams?

What we want is the freedoms guaranteed by The Constitution. Do I have a right to buy a gun even though I might use it for criminal activity?
The use of such by an unlicensed individual is a crime. The mere ownership of such is NOT a crime, not should it be.

After 30 years of ham radio, I'm considering a 1st trip to Dayton to stock up on boatanchors goodies.

Would greatly appreciate any trip tips. Here are some questions.

1. I haven't made any reservations. What and where is my best bet for lodging?
2. What are is the best advice for parking and times to attend? (is there an easy way to park and avoid the bumper to bumper traffic?)
3. Will I need more than 1 day to load up my car with goodies?
4, How does one lug heavy equipment across outdoor site to car (bring cart?)
5. Any other good surplus/radio/antique/interesting places to stop by between Texas and Ohio?
6. Especially good forums?
7. Expected weather that time of year?

Thanks in Advance!!

Good point!

NO ONE (regardless of what some small minds would like to imply) has bought a radio illegally at Radio Shack. (With the possible exception of some HAMs who came into Radio Shack in Jan of 1978 after the cutoff date and bought the 'junker' 23channel CB sets to convert to 10M.)

It's how they USE them that's illegal. And know what? I'd be willing to bet odds that if they actually tracked down the people who do the jamming, they'd find a few HAMs in there too... HAMs who are probably just expressing a grudge against the repeater and some of the people on it.

I just wonder how some of the 'small minds' out in that area treat outsiders to the 'clique' on the repeaters? They might have a real surprise if the situation were to be really inspected!

I only got 2. 1 for the AMU (I like that name -- cool) and 1 for a pro-2066

IF it was a problem it would be a very mature problem. Maybe it is.
Trying to change the effects of it all at this late date is futile. And the cure might easily be worse than the disease.

I'm told by a local Radio Shack manager that it is a policy of Radio Shack (Tandy, Inc.) not to sell amateur equipment to unlicensed persons. That is an internal decision by the company, according to the manager--who is a ham, BTW. Now, that doesn't mean that IF such a policy exists, that it doesn't get violated by locals. I'm just repeating what I was told. I do know that in the store I frequent, the manager will ask for a license and explain what the radio actually is. They often get mistaken for "CB" radios.

One thing to consider - you kinda have to know what you are doing to make these things work - and if someone who is unlicensed knows I think they would also know how to get this equipment elsewhere to do illegal things.

I mean most linear amplifiers are not sold with their 10 meter modes unless you are a licensed operator - but you hear cb users using them all the time anyhow.

Same with modified 10 meter equipment and general coverage transimitters.

Two problems (at least) with that idea. First, why should we think that permitting 15 minutes a week of broadcasting would satisfy K1MAN? I have followed his "career" for awhile, and heard him on the air enough to know that here is a person who likes to break rules for the sake of it. He would simply exceed the limit, and would make sure that everyone knew he was doing so.

The second problem is that if 15 minutes of broadcasting per week were allowed, the ham bands would be nothing but wall-to-wall with these transmissions. Assuming that only a quite conservative 1% of US licensed hams took advantage of such a privilege, that would mean about 7000 broadcasts per week, or about a thousand a day, or more than 40 per hour! Even if no hams outside the US did this, can you even begin to imagine the QRM? The bands would become completely unusable, all the time.

No, the solution to the K1MAN issue is to allow the FCC to do its job and either pressure him to cease broadcasting (as well as jamming, making unidentified transmissions, and verbally harassing other stations on the air), or to NAL him till he bleeds, and revoke his amateur licenses, and in the not entirely unlikely event that he continues even then, they ought to confiscate his ham rigs, amps, tuners, antennas, etc., over and over if necessary. It may take awhile, and he may be on the air for months to come, but its important not to respond to guys like this, that only encourages them. Eventually the FCC Compliance Office will put a stop to this. We've all seen them shut big nuisances like this down many times before, even if it takes longer than we would like. I have personally physically stood by and watched, with some satisfaction, the FCC and NYC police confiscate the entire stations of two "freebander"/CBers who were running close to 5KW AM into directional antennas and stomping all over 11 and 10 meters in much of downtown Brooklyn, as well as overloading TVs and getting into telephones for 3 or 4 blocks. This was in the early 80's, and of course the FCC slacked off mightily in the years after that and only in the past three years or so has it been getting back on track with reasonably vigorous amateur enforcement. Still, the law and the ham community are stacked heavily against K1MAN, whatever his claims to the contrary may be.

Well, in a word, yes. The FCC has notified manufacturers, importers, distributors, and major retailers that importation or sale, retail or wholesale, of so-called "10-meter export radios" will be banned as of 12/31/02 (the FCC keeps changing everything around on their website, so the URL I have for the pages that describe this action, as well as the very exact criteria they will use for determining what is designated a "10-meter export radio," but a search of that phrase and perhaps the words 'enforcment, ban, and/or sales.' should yield it up. This action doesn't stop RS selling its 10M rig, or unlicensed buyers from picking up a used HF ham rig, but a whole host of Rangers, Galaxys, and the like, the preferred radios of freebanders and over-power CB ops, are out. Next year those rigs become contraband, and as such the Customs Service gets into the act. The FCC may not exactly make truckstop CB shop owners quake in their boots, but Customs just might, and if not they should get the message after the first pallet of NIB radios is confiscated. Ouch, that's expensive! Illegal operators may keep right on, but nobody in business is going to ignore their bottom line so much they run themselves out of business, not at least for the sake of being willful. My brother helped gather the evidence the FCC needed to confront a Manhattan taxicab company in order to get them off the bottom of 10M. They were using Ranger 2950s and HTX-???s to dispatch cabs, and denied it. My bro and some other hams DFed these guys, tooks photos of cabbies using the radios, even "TX-fingerprinted" a few of them. They gave all this to the FCC, which used it to get the equivalent of a search warrant from an administrative law judge, and faced with the indisputable facts the cab company agreed to cease using 10M with 72 hours, rather than be fined many thousands and have the gear confiscated on the spot.

Likewise the FCC has contacted dealers and manufacturers of "10/12M" amplifiers and amp kits. Not that they ever were legal, but the FCC has given those in the trade notice they intend to enforce the existing law. They certainly didn't have to do this. They could have just set a date, waited, and swooped in and confiscated thousands of amps out of warehouses and stores. But they had the courtesy to give notice, and anyone in business stubborn enough to flout a good law of long standing that rests on solid legal ground ought to go out of business.

Not that any of this is going to eliminate every last caterwauling CBer with an amp so big it sets off the cardiac alarms at hospitals inside a 20-mile radius, or every "freebander" crawling and splattering all over the bottom 300 KHz of 10M, but it will clear up a lot of QRM. Locality by locality, neighborhood by neighborhood, it has cleared up much QRM since the whole freeband/linear CB thing got started in earnest in the 70s. Just now, things are focussing a bit more on the source and supply. There will still be unlicensed people with a dirty KW all over 26-32 MHz, but fewer off them, and maybe the added effort and expense of buying cleaner (than most CB/freeband) ham gear and building amps at least will mean that some bozo who means to transmit on Channel 40 doesn't splatter so much he is S-7 on 28400!

Not to take sides in this argument, but the reason for the NOSPAM in an email address is to help prevent the email "bots" from scouring newsgroups for email addys for spam. The sale of amateur radios to non-licensed individuals is neither a problem nor illegal. The OPERATION of TRANSMITTERS on amateur frequencies by NON-LICENSED individuals IS illegal, and THAT is the problem... To restrict the sales of these radios to only licensed operators would prevent the giving of such items to licensed operators as gifts, and would result in only a small fraction of a percentage of a decrease in the illegal operation of thes units...

Well if this were the case, them my friend who bought me my X-mas gift while I was volunteering with the Red Cross in NYC from October 3rd to December 26th would have been illegal, he knew of my desire, and plan to get my license, which I have got now, the license arrived in the mail yesterday.

I think that being able to buy them w/o a license is ok. What I think is that they should crack down on the "export" radios, and the selling of radios that can easilly be modified to work out of band i.e. the freebanders moding them to work 11m.

I have also seen and heard from being a shortwave listener for years, that the ham bands in some areas are as bad as 11m. Why not start by cleaning up our own bands before screaming and shouting at those who desire to join the amateur radio community. I have met both IRL, and online, some really great hams, I have also encountered real a$$holes, I do not let the jerks turn me away. I am currently learning the code, and studying for my general, I'd love to play with QRP, as well as PSK-31. I am also interested in setting up an IRLP node on one of my linux boxes.

Retailers should NOT be required to verify if someone has a valid amateur radio license. Considering how the law would hinder or eliminate the following:
-The ham who just passes the exam and wants to buy a radio-he can't

-The pre-ham that wants to buy a radio before he takes the test so he can listen to it and understand the rules of operation better.

-Sales at ham radio swapmeets. With guns, the right to buy them at a swapmeet has almost been eliminated.

-Gift purchase - What if your wife, etc, who is not a ham, wants to buy you a radio as a gift. With guns, this is illegal.

-Transfer/sale of radios - Is it going to be like guns sales? You must wait until they verify that your license is valid, and pay a processing fee, before you can buy a radio from a friend.

-What if you modify a amateur radio-will you be able to sell it? If you have a radio that can transmit out-of-band, will it be treated like an "assault rifle".

Having all these restrictions and government control on amateur radio sales would damage the hobby that is supposed to encourage good will. It's just a radio.

Out here in CA we have one repeater that people will occasionally get on and jam. We have several "Doppler teams" that chase these idiots down and post their pictures on a website. The Doppler teams are policing the frequency, just like hams are supposed to do.

Try getting into severe wx spotting/observations (AKA "Storm Chasing", but it isn't, really) My next vehicle, a late model Chev. Ext. Cab SB (I'd have it now, but came down with the flu over the weekend) will have the following:

1 Dualband 144/440 ham antenna
2 Single band 144 ham antenna (for APRS)
3 Active GPS antenna
4 Commercial dual band antenna feeding VHF and UHF radios through a duplexor
5 1/4 wave antenna for NOAA weather radio
6 PCS (cellular) antenna
7 CB antenna
8 Austin Spectra antenna for scanner
9 Mobile TV antenna (looks like a flying saucer)

In addition, I may add a second 2M ham rig/antenna. And this doesn't count the broadcast AM/FM radio!

Dan, as we can see, someone already got their panties in a knot. The real problem (at least as I see it) is that years ago (I don't want to reveal my age, but I was first licensed in 1962), transmitters and receivers were often two seperate entities. Today, most rigs are transceivers - whether VHF/UFH HTs, mobile rigs, or HF rigs. Personally, I can't see spending $300 or so for a receiver, only to have to shell out 800 plus for a transceiver when I get my ticket. The answer lies in funding for the FCC. I doubt many (at least here, in Rochester, NY) get away with using HTs for very long. I can fire up a repeater and give the control op a shout and invariably he answers. The repeaters are watched, and it isn't difficult to spot someone who doesn't know what is happening (even assuming they know how to set the sub-audible tones). I worry more about the manufacturers who make the 'export' radios that can cover amateur bands and make them available to anyone. If memory serves me correctly, Radio Shack discontinued their original 10 meter rig as it was too easy to modify for 11. There may be a few problems, but let's not throw the baby out with the bath water. You have a valid point, but I would not try and attack every manufacturer - and certainly, I am not opposed to those who buy a rig to listen and learn (again, buying a receiver followed by a bigger purchase might be a bit much for some folks).

Where I live, the repeater I use, is jammed by one or two people often. It is common knowledge who they are. Both ARE hams. I am not a board member of the repeater so I do not know what actions are or will be taken against those persons.
BTW I think owning, selling or buying ham equipment by non hams is fine.
Transmitting by anyone on a frequency he/she doesn't have a license for (that includes hams with out of band radios) is, not only illegal, but very bad.

Hello all,

I'm looking for a complete control head assembly for an Alinco DR-599 or DR-590 transceiver. I have acquired the body of the transceiver, but am after the control head.

Does anyone out there have one or know of where/how to get one??

My email is: vk2gjt@winnet.com.au

Thanks for any assistance,

Greg Towells

Hmm, if he resells Godaddy.com, then what shows up when you go to administer your domains?
I deal with Godaddy directly, and I can change where my domains point at any time.
There are some registrars that do a bit more for you, but they charge extra for that service. They just don't tell you about that.

I've heard there were some slight differences in units and not all bodies are compatible with all heads. I think by the time the 599 came out the firmware was pretty 'locked down' and they were swappable though.

Stagger Lee is a known fraud (perhaps why he posts anonymously) who cheats

"...death of a murderer or terrorist"?

What would you call someone who uses airborne projectiles to destroy a building, collapsing it around the occupants, thereby crushing or burning them to death; because of some perceived difference in the victim's international politics?

This is exactly what our own head of state, Elizabeth Windsor, was responsible for perpretrating on Sept 9th, in company with George W Bush.

If such behaviour is acceptable by western standards, what's all the fuss about Sept 11th? Pure hypocrisy?

I agree with you, Brian, Elizabeth Windsor is a terrorist and should be put to death. Well said, OM!

Dear Group,

Just got my general ticket and am getting ready to set up my shack for the first time.

I'm interested in QRP and am heading out this weekend to buy a new Yaesu FT817 rig... I know that an antenna is critical for QRP work, but lean finances and snow/ice (QTH in VT) is going to make it difficult to get anything major up in the air before spring.

So I planned to just throw up a LONG random wire until springtime. I was hoping some helpful soul could answer the following questions:
1) Do end-fed wire radiate omnidirectionally or directionally from the end of the string?

2) What type of balun (ratio? brand?) should I get to hook the antenna up to the feedline?

3) How does one ground a random wire? Should I just have the far end run down to a ground rod?

Thanks much for the help.

2652. Re: ILLEGAL SALE OF HAM RADIOS?

If YOU know who is doing the jamming via "common knowledge", etc. why don't you report their activity to RH? What they are doing is certainly illegal, and if the control ops also "know" who it is, then they are liable for not taking action to stop it. That's what control ops, club officers, etc. are for. Actually, they could be severely questioned and/or held responsible for NOT trying to get it stopped.

That sort of stuff is not tolerated around here on any frequency. Any such "doings" will get a ham "posse" together pretty quickly to DF the interference. One of these was actually quite funny. One night around 9 PM, a dead carrier came up onto the 145.35 machine and remained with the television clearly audible in the background. Eventually, we began to hear snoring as the "perp" had gone fast asleep. We DFed it to the home of a ham who had laid his mike on the arm of the chair. At some point, it fell down beside him, and when he changed position, he mashed the mike key. It was completely unintentional, and we were laughing amongst ourselves as the hunt progressed. This man was very redfaced when he was awakened and told what happened.

Another one was concerning those "export" and so-called "ten meter" rigs. There was a CBer on the west side of our town that was taunting, even mocking, the hams up on 28.610. Several hams, being new and unfamiliar with DFing, had tried to find him without success. They called me and asked me to try my luck. They thought, in fact, that they had the correct house and wanted me to verify it. The CB guy even bragged that "y'all can't find me". I drove out to the house the newbies thought was it, and confirmed that it was NOT the correct address. I then followed the signal simply by attenuation. I drove right in front of the perp's house, and the signal stopped (hmmmm, I guess he saw my screwdriver antenna on the car). We haven't heard him since.

I do hope that the info concerning FCC's approach to the illegal equipment targeted towards 11 meters is true. It is high time at the interference and actual "bandit" operations up on 10 meters is dealt with.

Doc,

Thanks for the informative post.

I actually work in IT and am very familiar with Google. And I DID perform the search you suggested prior to making this post... The simple fact is, however, that a large amount of amateur knowledge is not published on the web.

Perhaps I should've clarified this in the original post. But since you so KINDLY asked, here are the facts:
-I have seen articles via google that say that no balun is needed or that a 4:1 balun is needed. Since there is some ambiguity, I decided to make a post and seek the help of some other hams.
- Articles online also state that random wires radiate from the end point while others state they are omnidirectional. Again, I thought I'd query some more experienced hams.

I know from my work in IT that it is sometimes frustrating to field basic questions that can be typically answered by judicious use of a search engine. Nonetheless, I think a better response is to include a couple links you might have found or tersely answer the questions and direct the user to a search engine for more information.

So... I hope that clears the air.

Nonetheless, I feel it important to comment how discouraged I was with your response. If our hobby has become to 'important' to warrant a polite, somewhat verbose response then we are in trouble for sure.

Brian KA3ZKE

rec.radio.amateur.antenna newsgroup has several threads in which you might some answers to your questions.

Don't believe I'd ground the far end of your long wire....Use an antenna tuner, and the radiation pattern will be off the end if the wire is several wavelengths longer than a resonant cut.

FWIW, you can get a 100 watt rig for the same general price...

ASK ELMER

Dear Elmer,
I have a ground mounted 14 MHz Quarter Wave Vertical with 4 buried radials. Someone told me that I should raise the base of the antenna to 10 Ft. or more above the ground and elevate the radials. Will this work better for long distance contacts?
Sparky,

Dear Sparky,
This is one of these questions which is very difficult to say yes or no. There is a great deal of discussion on the merits of elevating vertical HF antennas to modify their performance, ie., to change their angle of radiation. None of the antenna engineering manuals or texts address this point, other than discussing the importance of a good radial system or counterpoise (which is an elevated radial system). My own personal experience has been using a Butternut vertical antenna, elevated 20 Ft. above the ground. I have 4 counterpoise on each band and the antenna performs very well. I have no personal experience with a ground mounted system but I have had QSO's with many operators whose antennas were ground mounted verticals. They reported very good results with their antennas. The only report on this subject which I am aware of is called
"VERTICAL USERS NOVICE TO EXTRA", by "DOC" AF2Y; dated 1980. The report infers that an elevated vertical performs better than a ground mounted antenna. The report is based upon signal reports given during QSO's verses the receiving stations antenna system, location and installation. I would suggest you perform your own tests for your antenna and location. Good luck!
73, Elmer

This is the only thing POSITIVE that you have contributed. The QRM'ing of 14.313 with Adolf Hitler speeches, and the treadmill, is however unexcusable.

Kind of confused by this one (the following). I have received many QSL's from DX that I did not originate (I did not send them a card first) so what makes receiving a card from a eQSL log any different than a paper one ??

Come on people eQSL are the way it has to be done going forward into the 21st Century.

Ron

"eQSL does not do this. eQSL receives a log and immediately makes cards available to all stations in that log without checking the information the other station has in his log or on his QSL. This is not acting as a QSL Manager; this is just plain presumptive QSLing. It is not adequate that the receiving station look at the QSL and confirm it. How many do you think will refuse a QSL from a really rare one who put the wrong call in his log so the eQSL went to the wrong person, or if the signal reports don't match, etc? There is no independent check here, thus eQSL is not performing the duties of a QSL manager, thus the eQSLs are not accepted by ARRL.

Here is how I see it, and if I am wrong, I am wrong. I am new to the amateur radio community. Ok, the FCC needs to crack down on the "export" rigs, and the companies that manufacture radios that can be too easilly modified to operate out of band. They also need to crack down on the makers of the amps that these fools love to use i.e. davemade, x-force ect. At the same time, there are hams out there that are also partaking in these activities, they should also be held accountable. Same rules apply to all, and amateur radio is a self policing group right?

No question. Illegal is illegal. And if hams are aiding and abetting illegal activities, then they should have to pay the piper as well. I don't cull 'em out when it comes to what's right. I truly hope to see the makers, the sellers, and the users getting busted for it.

I, for one, am fed up with the activities on the low end of 10 meter and down on 12. Every one they smack down is a victory for Amateur Radio, IMHO.

Brian,
No balun is used for random wires. There is no directivity to a long wire unless it reaches about 10 wavelengths which is unfeasible for the majority of us. NEVER ground the actual long wire itself. Instead run a wire from the back of your tuner or from the back of your radio+tuner to either a cold water pipe or to a ground rod outside. When you tune up with a long wire, NEVER apply full power but just enough to see how the relected power changes as you twiddle the knobs. Then write down the settings.
Best,
Doc,AF2Y

p.s. I think her ancestors abandoned Battenburg during the

It was translated to Mountbatten, which fooled everyone, of

This morning, I, AF2Y, had a quick chat on 14.313 with two of the finest hams in the business-Donald,W4JYZ and David from Indiana whose call skips my mind. After we all signed, who showed up. The great KA6URA from Westminster,CA and Joe, WA4KBX from Barnhole,SC. Joe started ripping me but Bob wouldn't buy it.He said that he had had many fine QSYs with me and would enjoy another however my 50 watts and a random wire ain't gonna cut the mustard to sunny Cal.

Now old hickey Joe was attacking me but HELLO RILEY...were you listening? Hello....You gave me a rough time ,Riley, for arguing. You said my ticket would be lost if I continued. You said I'd be punished if I spoke mean words about any ham but what about YOUR DIXIE LANDSMAN, Riley? It's okay for Barnhole Joe to say that when I walk my arms hang to the ground? It's okay for him to disparage me as if I were a gorilla? But if I came on that frequency and called him an ignorant s.o.b, you'd take my ticket, right? Hey Mr. Hollingsworth..WE, not YOU won the Civil War. Don't like facts my good man? Tough! Want to avenge the loss by picking on a Yankee? Find someone else, not AF2Y.

I came back to the hobby in GOOD FAITH. I disparage no one because as you wrote and said, that's counter productive to ham radio. How about sharing your message to the Barnholer and stop playing favorites? And the reason you don't take K3QAM off the air is because one of your great SOUTHERN composers, Stephan Foster, wrote the classic, "I Dream of Queenie with the Light Brown Hair."

First off your post is NOT that of Lloyd Davies's. Never could he spell "positive, contributed, treadmill and inexcusable."
So you're a hack ghostwriter of his; an ignorant shill and brown noser.
I have no Hitler speeches; there was no law against exercising and hamming simultaneously. Hopefully I interested others in using a treadmill for a myriad of excellent reasons.
See you later,shill,

Our club is planning to try both WriteLog and networking for the first time this Field Day. Since we want to only tackle logging this go-around, we'd like to prevent someone from inadvertently selecting a menu item we're not using and getting us into a situation we can't get out of.

Is there someway to disable non-logging functions?

Thanks.

I'm curious about this "policy" myself. My wife bought me a 10 m rig from them in 2000 for Christmas (she's a nonham). Plus, I've never been asked for my license when buying stuff there.

There's another sticky issue I haven't seen mentioned either, the secondary market. If I resell a radio, do I now have to check for licenses? What a pain that would be. Would put a crimp in many a hamfest.

Doc...there is no such thing as a "quick" chat with Donnie. Unless you are endowed with eons of patience that the rest of us do not have, any conversation with Donnie results in one wanting to rend the sheets! Donny is eternally slooooooow and commands great angst on the part of other Hams. Does Donny talk in slow motion because he thinks in slow motion? Donnie has an uncanny ability to say in two hours what the rest of us can say in two minutes. And to top it off, he really doesn't say much at all!

What are my choices?
Are there any of these that have a built in antenna tuner?

Hello all-

I am trying to save some $$$ and construct a antenna for monitoring the 30 MHZ to 50 MHZ band using just speaker wire.

Any ideas on this? I am actually picking up some long distance reception just by unwinding the spool of wire and dangling it from my upstairs window...

Looking for proper lengths, how to contruct, etc...

thanks

Hi, Scott,

I don't remember the program, but most of the QST articles on DSP are available at:

TAPR, http://www.tapr.org, is also a good source of info.

For receiving you can be pretty sloppy and never tell the diff.

1. Dimensions: 30 MHz is a ten-meter wavelength and 50 MHz is 6 meters and you should have somewhere between half and 1.5 times that for optimal non-directional reception but it isn't all that critical as you have noted so 25 feet give or take would work admirably but 15 would do the job nearly as well if not equally well.

2. Mounting: At VHF there ain't no substytoot for altytood. Seems you are looking for skip which isn't quite so demanding but high and in the clear applies with high more interesting. For local stuff, vertical mounting would be preferable but after a sig bounces around a bit only God knows its polarization so it probably is not worth sweating. Angle mounting and droopy ends might be unsightly but are perfectly acceptable.

3. Construction: easiest approach is to cut the length for where you plan to mount it, short both ends together, fold it in half to determine the center point, and open one (not both!) wires in the speaker wire to attach whatever feedline you plan to use including more speaker wire if need be for cheap and find the way to connect it to whatever receiver you have in mind and which you did not specify; just don't screw up the coax connector if any trying to be really cheap. At the feedpoint, a bit of scrap plastic to support things is not a bad idea; be creative.

4. Safety: Keep away from power lines and plan to unplug it during electrical storms which is pretty good practice anyway. And don't bust your butt hanging it from the eaves.

You are receiving skip signals courtesy of the 11 year sunspot cycle which may have only a year or so to run for this freq band but it does open at other times with what is called 'Sporadic E'. It is also why it is colder than a well-digger's patoot in the mid-Continent at the moment and why you are smarter than you know to keep it cheap.

It is called the low-Band in commercial circles and is not really all that popular anymore, partially because of skip. The lo-band runs from 30 thru 44 with a lot of goofy stuff in the 44-50 segment including older cordless phones. The 44-50 part was the original Channel 1 on TV sets but was withdrawn in the late 40s before I watched TV come on the air in Omaha in 1949.

You can look up anything you copy by frequency at http://www.fcc.gov to see at least what is assigned there.

Good Listening

i dont believe you will find any anymore with a built in power supply and a tuner at these freqs are worthless there is so much signal loss that at 1.2gig no signal would even get to the antenna honestly i dont know why anyone would want a tuner on VHF and above the antennas are so small and most cover the entire band anyways what do you need to tune
i think the only radios out thart cover all 3 bands are the kenwood TS790 and the icom 910 or ic970 good luck

Just looking for opinions on the two radios....what would most of you guys recommend?

I am studying for my General ticket and need an entry-level radio that will still keep me happy when my learning progresses.

THANKS

mailed eQSL's
Hi Rich:

Something does not sound right here. You are saying that Dave is physically mailing out QSL cards by the US postal system? This is news to me.

If you are my QSL manager and I send you my logs by e-mail, I am sending them direct from point A to point B. Just as if I was sending them to you by regular mail. This is OK. I remember somewhere several years ago that some people used to get their logs over the air on RTTY and another digital mode (AMTOR I think). Not a problem.

However, if as the result of a log being sent to E-QSL, someone goes in and receives a card electronically and uses it for DXCC, that e-QSL cannot be accepted for DXCC credit under rule 2. I spent a bit of time with a simple shareware program to prove the unreliability of that method.

However, if Dave, acting as QSL manager with station logs completes a card (even one from his printer) and sends it by mail to you, this is an acceptable exchange and we have see this often for several years now.
(assuming he phyiscally checks the log). Many people use self-made cards from their printer.
Each one is evaluated on a case by case basis, and many times under Section IV rule 4(b) we have conducted an audit to insure the vaildity of a card like this.

In cases like this it would be REAL nice if they used a stamp or placed their initials or signature on it, but this is not required by the rules.
However, this issue has been discussed and has been given some consideration.

To clarify, if Dave is sending out cards through the US Postal System as the result of the log(s) he receives, this is OK. (This would basically be operating as QSL manager).

Regards,

Bill Moore NC1L
DXCC Manager

2728. GPS at the receiving end of radio tracking system

I've copied an old posting below that was along the lines of what I want to achieve and I'd like to know if anyone knows enough about this to answer some questions. I'm not an engineer, so I only need enough information to decide if this is worth pursuing.

Basically, my company manufactures teeny-tiny coin cell-powered transmitters that are attached to falcons so a falconer can find his bird if it doesn't come back right away. The heaviest model weighs less than 10 grams, so there's no room for a GPS!

I like the idea of using phasing techniques to determine the distance between the transmitter and the receiver. It should be possible to pinpoint the location of the transmitter using a GPS at the receiving location, commonly available GPS mapping software, and a nice doppler receiving unit. Our transmitters work very well as they are, without trying to pack a gps into their tiny dime-sized cases.

I don't doubt the feasibility of precisely pinpointing a transmitter's location with GPS-like accuracy as long as the transmitter (or clock or whatever) is stable in frequency - My question is this, how likely is it that a transmitter can remain stable enough to pinpoint it's location to within 100 meters (give or take) when it's temperature swings wildly? Let's say the bird takes a bath in a glacial mountain stream, then sunbathes on a hot rock...

As I write this, I'm remembering some of my old college physics courses:

c=F*lambda

so if I know the change in F I can calculate the change in lambda - so the change in lambda is my positional error due to frequency drift? (Our transmitters operate at 173Mhz, I think.)

3e8 m/s = (173e6 Mhz + 5Mhz drift) * (1.73 m + positionError)

I figure positionError is about .05 meters and if I multiply that by 100 to guess on a real world error, I come up with an error of 5 meters. That's too good to be true. If I made some silly mistake somewhere, keep in mind that I work 75 hours a week ;)

What do you think?

<nybody else got any ideas?

<egards,
<Joe McGraw (JMCGRAW@DELPHI.COM)
There does seem to be a chance in "time of flight", or equivalently, in phase measurements. They are basically the same thing and depend on the time of travel for a signal from the pet to reach a receiver. From the time of flight (TOF) the distance can be calculated from the speed of light. From a single receiving station we then know the pet is on a circle at a certain distance from the receiver. With two receivers and distance measurements the pet will be at the intersections of two such circles. Three receivers can remove the ambiguity, if it is a problem.

Success depends on accurate timing. At least two sorts of clocks ought to work, a local clock at the site of the "base station" or a referenhce clock in the form of a broadcast transmitter, where the receiving (base) station is only a listener, both for the pet's transmitter and the broadcast transmitter.
Putting a transmitter at the base station doubles the time delays and thus the accuracy of the location for a given timing accuracy.
Time delays could be measured by means of a clock and digital timers, to the tune of about 3 meters (1.5) meters distance accuracy if the clock oscillator runs at 100 Mhz (10 nS period). 200 MHz counters are not impractical or expensive. Indeed, a single counter could serve all receivers by making the measurements sequentially. This sort of timing could be enough for either TOF or phase measurements (Taking the time between zero crossings of the reference signal compared to the zero crossings of the received signal from the pet.) An alternative would be a phase detector like a MC1496 or a DBM.
The phase method sounds harder but can be a narrow band system and so it can work with favorable signal to noise ratio and low power so it might well yield the better accuracy. The time of flight approach could compensate by using less frequent but higher power transmissions.
Compensation for delays in the transponder carried by the pet must be included as all filters will add their own contributions. Similar filters
at the base station can give the correction.
For a phase system the transmissions might be an AM broadcast or a time standard or LORAN signal retransmitted, assuming no local transmitter is used.

(A local transmitter modulated with 1 MHz has some unpleasantly far away
sidebands and the receivers would need to take this into account.) The other system probably wants a transmitter of narrow-in-time pulses.
The bandwidth would be great and the transmitter ought to be at high frequency. I have no idea if there are bands allowing this kind of RADAR-
like operation.
The phase system probably would work well in bands for radio controlled models and might be within the purposes permitted. There would be less trouble with loss of signal if the pet went behind a building, whereas this might happen at higher frequencies.
The device carried by the pet could resemble an old transistor radio in size and complexity. Costs of this or the base station need not be high.

Well, that is a core of a method. Comments are welcome.

There is a non-radio method for anyone willing to bury a wire around the border of the area in which the pet is to remain confined. Setting this up as an induction loop seems to be sufficient to detect a pet crossing the wire to leave the loop. It might be better to create two loops with a couple meters between them. There is surely some way to decide if the pet is inside or outside a loop, based on the sign of the signal. At low frequencies the pet could carry a clock accurate enough to maintain a known phase over long times.
With the double loop one could learn something from the relative phases, as well. The phase could be reversed if the pet lies on its back but I assume this makes leaving the controlled area an awkward process for most pets.

If you use one about 70 feet long, it will be tune up from 40M up. Use 140 feet if you want to use 80M, double it again if you want 160. The higher the frequency, the more directional it will be, but there are many, many lobes and you will probably not notice any directivity to it except on 10 meters where I would point it at the direction you most likely want to work. Use the best ground you can, the best would be a counterpoise, that is another or multiple wires just like it running under the antenna on or in the ground, but a ground rod will work. It will be a noisy antenna. If you put up a dipole, you will really notice the difference in the noise. You will need a tuner. I have a IC738 and use the tuner in the radio, it works fine. I feed it with coax and if the band won't tune up, use a different length of coax (just add a foot or 2 of rg58) and see if it will tune there. Just a lot of trial and error, but it will work and if you get it up high enough, you will be supprised how good it will work. But an antenna tuned for a specific band will outperform it any day.

Ignore the editorializing from some of the ding-dongs.

You can see for yourself, I setup a temp website until my QSL account gets Click on the Mobile button. It's a little hard to see the 10m antenna, but you can tell it's there if you look at the bases.

A collection? For him? You gotta be kidding. He'd only take the money and Well, Roger did it again. He and his band of Merry Lavender Lads took a drive over to Moundsville this evening. They stopped at Bob's Lunch for a bite to eat and Roger acted stupidly again.

While seated in their booth Rogie noticed a young woman munching on a hot dog. She was picking rather gingerly at it and as she took each little nibble Roger became more and more agitated. After a few minutes of this Roger could stand it no longer.

He jumped from the booth and approached the young woman. The woman looked up at Roger and before she could say a word, Roger snatched the hot dog from her plate. He then began to berate her, saying, "Don't you know how to eat a hot dog? What is WRONG with you? I'LL SHOW YOU HOW TO EAT A HOT DOG!"

Roger then took the piece of tubular meat and placed it in his pouty little mouth as he rolled his eyes back in his pointy little head. He swallowed the tube steak with one gulp and glared at the hapless young woman and said, "THAT is how you eat a hot dog!"

Roger then spun on his high heels and minced back to the booth amid cheers from his fellow Lavender Lads. The owner, Bob, told the Lads they would have to leave. As the group of Merry Men walked from the establishment the customers could hear the Lads praising Roger with comments such as, "YO! Roger, you da man!" and "Roger. Roger. He's the man! If he can't swallow it, nobody can!"

Doc has deftly avoided Roger's past attacks upon Jews, Hispanics, and other ethnic groups. Why is this? Doc never seems to be at a loss for words. Why now?
Doc seemingly prefers to simply avoid the topic in hopes that it will just go away...bury the head in the sand syndrome. Stagger Lee once queried Doc about this, but Doc simply did not comment.
Doc. Are you being an enabler here? Do you and Rogie share some sort of kinship that we are not aware of? Hard to understand that a Goyim would be one of your butt-buddies.
It is rather funny that the two of you can resort to only one response in that you take posters to task for not publishing their Ham calls. That old accusation has become rather stale and overused.
Doc, think about this. Roger is a closet racist. The man has many deep-rooted problems. Unless you wish to be known by the company you keep perhaps you should reconsider your friendships. I recall a bit of advice that I was given many years ago. If you hang around with a skunk long enough, pretty soon you will smell like a skunk too.

Wogey reminds one of the air-filled plastic Do-Do birds that children play with. He has been spanked so many times but doesn't comprehend it and just keeps popping back up with the same stupid unchanging look on his face! Add a small button on the side of the bird marked "spew filth" and you could market the toy bird under a name like The Spankum Woger Filth Bird.

But mainly, it's another lonely old night for Loose Catamite posting to the

Roger knows the names of the two daughters because W4AMP, James O'Brainless, fed the info to his newest puppet. And how did O'Brainless get this

I see you guys are mentioning Dimmy O�Brainless quite a bit. It is pretty clear that you all realize he has no real worth as a human being. It is also clear that you all know about his prison record, so no mention will be made of it at this time.

Do you know that Obrainless is an old hand at stalking? Oh, yes he is! Not only does he stalk, but so also does his wife! Both are known to follow their victims and go to great lengths to find out any and all sorts of personal information they can get on the victim. It is rather odd that Dimmy often complains that HE is being stalked. Imbalanced individuals are often like this�the fault is always somebody else�s.

You may not know that Dimmy has no checking or savings accounts. He also has no credit. The only �loans� he can get come from the local pawn shops in the Atlanta area.

The next time Dimmy blasts somebody about driving a compact car, ask him how his barely operable junker is doing. Ask him why he cannot get a loan to buy a new one. Ask him how much noise that side window Hefty bag makes at fifty miles an hour. Bet it is not as much noise as that red-headed wind-bag he lives with.

You might also ask Dimmy if he ever got around to painting the sheetrock walls in his rental unit. That�s right. He rents. He cannot buy a house because 1. He has no money, and 2) even if he had some money he couldn�t get a loan.

The next time you hear Dimmy on 14.313, ask him if he still uses the prepay cell phones. Ask him who he has sent magazine subscriptions to lately. Ask him who he has been following and who he has been harassing. Ask him. Then listen to him lie to you.

Recently, Icom imposed on its dealers a "minimum advertised price policy" that does not allow dealers to publicly advertise prices for certain models below minimum Icom set price levels (sounds illegal to me). I went to a hamfest yesterday, and a dealer I am familiar with that normally posts prices of gear on the boxes had no posted prices on anything. You had to ask what the prices are.

As a result, surfing the net will not yield the best price. I suggest you contact several dealers directly to find out their prices. I believe you may find your lowest price at www.gigaparts.com, or www.kjielectronics.com. I have had good experiences with both. I am sure there are other dealers whose "real" prices may be lower than those they presently show on their web sites.

In the following, Chickenshit Faggot Lee tries to justify his cowardice:

Chickenshit COWARD Faggot Lee pathetically tries to justify his hiding behind anonimity in <3B8FFFF5.143FA347@houston-hunks.com>:

"...readers have already had uninvited people show up at their homes, have had people subscribe them to magazines and book clubs, have received hang-up calls in the middle of the night, have had poison pen letters written to their neighbors and employers, and have had poison pen email sent to their ISPs in an attempt to get their accounts canceled. That's not a "what if" scenario either: It has happened repeatedly to certain members of these news groups, yours truly included (one person has emailed repeated lies to Altopia in an attempt to learn my identity). One of our readers has even had to go to the courts and obtain an injunction against one of those nuts.

I choose not to give insane people like that any kind of edge in physically locating me, and if you think that's "cowardice", you are only demonstrating your profound ignorance of Usenet and of the kind of people who read these posts."

Then the no-balls coward ends his feminine cuntly whining with:
"And do you know what else? I AM SICK TO DEATH OF THOSE WHO REPEAT YOUR TIRED OLD, IGNORANT REFRAIN. Until you learn a few things, you ought to shut your arrogant mouth."

This is from the Estate of W8WW, Joe Keller.
Radio was working as of June 2001 and has been offline since then.
Radio was powered back up in January and reception was checked on 10 meters.
Has two extra CW filters and 1.9 kc filter. in orig box with manuals.
Kept in great shape by my father.
All upgrades done by Icom up to 2001.
Excellent Condition, no nicks, scraches or dents.
This is the radio that my father destroyed 10 meters on and was considered a local in japan and europe by his signal.. Look at the dx summit web site for a search on listing of W8WW as DX.

More info at : http://www.icomamerica.com/amateur/hf/ic775dsp.html

We are asking $2300.. Its worth every penny for a great radio like that.
My father purchased many different radios like the 1001MP and the Icom 756 (i think thats the one) but always returned to his old reliable and trusty 775.

Have the Heil Headset with the DX element and the Icom adaptor for $100 also.
Will sell that seperate.

Open to resonable offers.. Not desperate to sell however will put online and take to dayton if needed.

Sony has had a similar policy for years. They call it "fair market value" pricing. Sony is also very difficult to get parts from, unless you happen to be one of their licensed warranty facilities. :(Sad to see Icom taking this route.

Just a THANK YOU for all those stations who are prepared to sacrifice just a little of their hourly rate to strain to work us little 'uns. I realise that my ever closing WAS (just need 7 including HI) is entirely due to large antennas, good RX, good ears and a lot of patience your end.

The retest letter didn't specify a reason, and certainly didn't say anything about any jamming. Do you want me to post the retest letter? And why are you too chickenshit to give your callsign, Georgie?

July 11, 2000

CERTIFIED MAIL--RETURN RECEIPT REQUESTED

Mr. Roger L. Wiseman

610 Glen Haven Avenue

Glendale, WV 26038-1302

SUBJECT: Amateur Radio license KC8JBO

Dear Mr. Wiseman:

Pursuant to Section 97.519(d)(2) of the Commission's Rules, 47 C.F.R.
Section 97.519(d)(2), the Commission has the authority to re-administer any examination element previously administered by Volunteer Examiners (VE's).
The Commission may either administer the examination itself, or under the supervision of a Volunteer Examiner Coordinator (VEC) or VE designated by the Commission.

Accordingly, we are requiring you to re-take the General Class Amateur Examination, (Elements 2, 3(A) and 3(B)) under the supervision of an American Radio Relay League Volunteer Examiner Coordinator. This examination must be completed on or before September 11, 2000. The required code speed that you must demonstrate is 5 words per minute.

Please be prepared to verify your current address and to present a photo identification. Pursuant to Commission rules, your license will be cancelled if you do not appear for re-examination. You will be granted an Amateur Radio license consistent with the elements you pass upon re-examination.

Sincerely,

W. Riley Hollingsworth

Special Counsel, Amateur Radio

Enforcement Bureau

There's the letter...no mention of why a retest was given, nor is interference even mentioned. Get over the fact that I passed it, (which says a lot about me, just like the non-use of your callsign says a lot about you) and recently upgraded....while your on-air activities is to be content to jam W4AMP.

For Immediate Release:

Twice-fired FCC employee wanted by Federal Communications Commission for violations of Part 97. George F. Arsics, Jr., ex K1QKJ, AB4ZV, and currently W2ZB, is wanted by the FCC for multiple repeat violations of part 97 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended. As you will recall this is the ex-Powder Springs FCC employee who was caught by his co-workers jamming KV4FZ on 14.313 in a drunken stupor, and promptly fired. Since that time Arsics has been directly involved with the jamming, stalking, and harassment of several amateurs through a group known as the "Goodfellows". Other accomplices of Arsics in this activity have been N4CND, WB2OTK (call revoked), N4XCV (call revoked), KA9BSD, KK9G, and N9PGE. Arsics lost his home at 2571 Bethany Lane in a last minute sale to avoid foreclosure earlier this year. Thus his FCC ULS data is fraudalent. Arsics has done this in the past, once listing the retirement home where his father passed on his 610. This enables him to freely jam other amateurs on HF with no fear of revocation. According to part 97, and we quote,
" ⁄97.23 Mailing address.
Each license grant must show the grantee's correct name and mailing address. The mailing address must be in an area where the amateur service is regulated by the FCC and where the grantee can receive mail delivery by the United States Postal Service. Revocation of the station license or suspension of the operator license may result when correspondence from the FCC is returned as undeliverable because the grantee failed to provide the correct mailing address."

If you know the actual physical location of the station owned by George Arsics, Jr. used to jam and stalk other hams, please report this information to your local FCC Field Office or contact Riley Hollingsworth, Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement at rholling@FCC.gov.

Greetings;

My cable company installed a coaxial splitter in my basement that allows 5.5db on its outputs.
I also have one in my toolbox that allows 8db.

Question: Given that I have a DOCSIS cablemodem, which splitter is best?
Also, would the splitter also attenuate the transmissions of my cablemodem as well? --I know it would attenuate the downstream.

NOTE: My Surfboard web interface always reports 0db, so that measurement might be disabled. My upstream power is reported at 54db, and I know this is on the high-side of normal...

And&#65533; I would like to thank the hams of the countries around the world for coming up into the U.S. area of the bands for the contests! It gave them points, but also gave us an opportunity to finally &#65533;pick-up&#65533; some of the &#65533;tougher&#65533; ones on 10 meters. We had decent band conditions and great cooperation. I think that was fun.

Just an old man I guess, but I am still amazed that I can sit in my house with 100 watts and a ground mounted vertical antenna and talk to 42 countries in one day. Yup, still magic to me, and I like it that way.

Thanks again,

Visit Columbus, Texas, the state's oldest continually-occupied Anglo American settlement. A friendly atmosphere always prevails in the little town nestled among century old live oak and magnolia trees. Columbus is centrally located on I-10, no more than a two-hour drive from Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Victoria and the Gulf Coast.

Its central location makes Columbus a great meeting place for friends and families. Come spend a day in the country or stay overnight at one of our Bed & Breakfasts or motels. Several RV parks are located in the immediate area. Visit our Historical Sites, leisurely browse in our Antiques Shops, Gift Shops, Boutiques and choose from a variety of restaurants. Don't forget your camera!

Tourism officials, the Lower Colorado River Authority and the Pioneer Trails Association have mapped out trails of interest to visitors. The Columbus Area Chamber of Commerce and Tourism Information offices are located in the restored 1886 Stafford Opera House. Walking Tour maps and other visitor information about the area is available in the Opera House.

You know Wogey went to the doctor the other day. He tells him, "Doctor, I'm not sure what is going on but here lately the only way I can get an erection is if my Momma gets on top."

The doctor thinks about it for a minute or two then he says, "Well Woger, it's pretty clear, the only way you can fuck is up!"

The Lavender Lads picked up Woger in the Lavender Express, as it is affectionately known around Glendale. The Lavender Express is an old pick me up truck which the lads use to get around town and is painted, you guessed it!, a bright Lavender, can't miss it!

Anyway, the Lads have an unfortunate accident on the way to one of their manly parties, and the Lavender Express ends up driving off a bridge into a river. How awful, although all the Lads riding in the open back did manage to escape the sinking truck except for Woger who kept screaming, "I can't get the darn tail gate open." Lucky for Wogey, the truck finally sank, and Wussman floated free, screaming he was going to sue the truck manufacturer for making a faulty tail gate!

Hello all-

I am surveying an area on my apartment roof to place an HF transmitting antenna, and on my rooftop is a large propane (or maybe butane) gas tank, used by the apartment utilities.

If I place my antenna on the roof (obviously not on TOP of the tank...) will this cause any problems?

I anticipate on transmitting with 100 watts power.

Thanks

2839. Sure signs that you're being stalked by Woger

For those of you that don't know, besides numerous convictions for sex offenses (generally involving young boys), our Woger has quite a history of stalking. Here are some sure signs that Woger is on your trail:

1). Look for small but deep tracks in the snow by your house, generally around your bathroom windows and garbage cans, at 5'4 and 280 lbs Woger leaves distinctive tracks.

2). Look for writing in the snow with Roger's named spelled wrong. This is an indication of his failed West Vagina education (recently I've noticed that the DNA samples show that it is Woger's urine but the hand writing matches his buddy Matthew Moulton, this is a new but disturbing development).

3). Finding evidence that someone has been eating out of your garbage can is always a good indication that Woger is around.

4). Check your dog's and your neighbors dog's anus, if it is bleeding this is a prime indication of Woger being in the neighborhood.

IF you notice any of the above or look out your window and see a fat sack of shit trying to hide his fat ass behind your garbage can it is a prime indication you have a Woger stalker. Time to lock and load....

-Jesus

2840. Re: End Fed Random Wire

For end fed wire antennas, the best idea is to choose your favorite band as the starting point. Let's choose for example 20 meter phone. Sixteen feet + inches will suffice but for simplicity, let's just use 16 feet which is a QUARTER WAVE on 20 phone, about 14.300 mHz. Remember that two of these quarter waves separated by an insulator and fed with coax is a HALF WAVE dipole which I consider far superior to any end fed wire.
Now that 16 foot wire will work fine on 20 and it should enable tuning up on 15 also because a quarter wave on that band is about eleven feet. But on 10 meters the 16 foot wire may not be able to be tuned with a decent SWR because 16 feet on 10 is an EVEN not an ODD multiple.Of course a 16 foot wire will NOT tune up on 40 and 75.
So let's go for the next odd multiple for 20 which comes to three quarter waves, 48 feet. Not long enough for 75 but it will work on 40. On 10, 48 feet comes to six quarter waves which is an even multiple so you'll have trouble tuning up on that band and on 15, since a quarter wave is about 11 feet, that 48 incher comes too close to being four quarter waves which of course is close to one wavelength so you'll have problems.
My point is that establishing the length of a long wire is tricky because the proper length for one or two bands will mess up others. I use one about 150 feet with 90 hidden so well around this townhouse condo, no one can see it. And if I find dead birds on the property, they couldn't see an additional 60 feet running to a tree which also is expertly camouflaged, the wire, not the tree. With that 150 foot end fed to a tuner and 50 watts, I work no one but make believe I do while collecting invisible QSLs.

I think this would not be a problem, even if your antenna, which would have a good static ground path, happens to attract and get struck by a bolt of lightning, thereby releasing several megacoulombs of charge in the vicinity of the propane tank.

(Just a joke son, I would not recommend it).

Watertight HELICAL feed, NO aperture blockage,2' dish is 20.5 dBi gain, 3' dish is 25 dBi gain. 2" crossboom mount.A true performer. Signals from AO-40 at unbelievable squint angles. You should hear what you have missed! I have also posted tips you may find interesting. AMSAT has expressed intrest in my antenna to be sold at Dayton, but I have a limited supply. Drop by my site and just tell me what you think if you like.

It would seem that you've got Roger cold there. I hope so. If you like you could add acid to it be reference to the posting with the phrase
"My first baby pic" that a certain Bertie the Bunyip made a month or two ago. I'm sure that the Federal Agencies would be able to track it back to Roger - it was a kiddy porn picture.

Can I donate money to your legal funds?

Its time that Roger was held to account for behaving like a very badly behaved child. Usenet could do without him.

As a middle-of-the-road voter who chose Gore in Nov.2000, I am sorely disappointed by events in the Democratic party.
Not only is the stuff coming out of D.C. but on ham radio as well. The GW haters are NOT delineating between Bush's stateside programs and his war efforts thereby hampering the latter which has become FAR MORE IMPORTANT than the former. In other words we can loaf along with domestic programs which will be addressed in due time but NOT so with the war. Dems and other anti-Bush persons simply do NOT get it...if we do not win this war, we won't have to concern ourselves with stateside programs because we will no longer be in control of our own country! Can't these people understand that under Clinton we had butter and no guns. Now it's GUNS that must prevail and if we can't have both, then everyone should tighten their belts until GUNS destroy the wild animals who are dead set on killing us.

I mentioned ham radio. I'm hearing on it dissension and the effort to humiliate GW. It's free speech so nothing can be done about it but perhaps the Bush knockers should think twice about what's going into their mics because it sounds like hell.I myself used to tear him a new one especially on the Internet because of my inactivity on ham radio due to moving. Before 9/11 I considered him an incompetent nincompoop who had no right sitting in 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue but became aware of a big change in him on the night of 9/20 when he addressed the full Congress. The fumbling presence was GONE.
A leader had been born. The leadership is still there which explains why so many of us support him-take a look at the polls.

To run him down by asking about an Afghanistan timetable is the rottenest thing imaginable. Did the Republicans in '42 badger FDR about a timetable for defending ourselves and taking the war to Japan, Germany and Italy? Didn't GW tell us this was going to be a complicated, painstaking and lengthy war effort? I heard it; why then didn't Daschle and Byrd? We the people support the President and this backbiting is going to hurt the Dems in mid term elections this November.
Sure, we all want to see great domestic programs such as GW promised and the Dems were pushing for prior to 9/11 but priorities have changed drastically. We all must mobilize AGAINST the overseas crazies and FOR GW Bush and stop this guns AND BUTTER at the same time mentality. It won't happen/

I am in need of the Frequency Switch for a Tektronix 496 Spectrum Analyzer. I believe it is listed in the Service Manual as Switch, Rotary Optical, part number 263-0054-00. Tektronix does not have the part; any help would be appreciated. I would also consider a complete 496 unit that is good for parts only.

Please e-mail what you have along with a price to:

No.

We need to bring all our armed forces back and patrol our northern and southern boarders. We need to stop letting these third-world bags of garbage enter our nation. Only after we have stopped that, and deported every illeagal out of here, then we can go abroad.

Andre,

We are working on it with some of the best minds on the planet in this field.

The efficiency of the device is estimated near 60% and the power-cell is safe enough for a consumer device. Once we are fully funded we expect to build the prototype of the device on our drawing boards within the next 8 months. They will likely be in production in about 1 year to 18 months.

Our theories and mathematical models are very sound and this technology is very likely to work.

Expect to have devices that are self powered for the life of the device very soon.

To answer the previous two questions. First, using ez-domain whatever is simply the GoDaddy website with their name on it and a few extra dollars tacked on. All functions that you use with GoDaddy are available with ez-domain...there is nothing different except the price is higher with ez-domain.

Now why put an amateur call into the Internet's commerical domain? Because most people today do not care that dot com originally referred to a commercial entity, dot org to a non-commercial organization, dot net to a network/telecommunications company etc. Most people think of a web address with dot com first, so when registering a domain, most (like me) went to the dot com first - as in www.wb8nut.com

2900. Immigrants Must Adapt

Immigrants must adapt

Immigrants, not Americans, must adapt. I am tired of this nation worrying about whether we are offending some individual or his culture. Since the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, we have experienced a surge of patriotism by the majority of Americans; however, the dust from the attacks had barely settled when the politically correct crowd began complaining about the possibility that our patriotism was offending others.

I am not against immigration, nor do I hold a grudge against anyone who is seeking a better life by coming to America. Our population is almost entirely comprised of descendants of immigrants. However, there are a few things that those who have recently come to our country, and apparently some born here, need to understand. This idea of America being a multicultural community has served only to dilute our sovereignty and our national identity. As Americans we have our own culture, our own society, our own language and our own lifestyle. This culture has been developed over centuries of struggles, trials and victories by millions of men and women who have sought freedom. We speak English, not Spanish, Arabic, Chinese, Japanese, Russian, or and other language. Therefore, if you wish to become part of our society, learn the language! In God We Trust is our national motto. This is not some Christian right wing, political slogan. We adopted this motto because Christian men and women on Christian principles, founded this nation, and this is clearly documented. It is certainly appropriate to display it on the walls of our schools. If God offends you then I suggest you consider another part of the world as your new home because God is a part of our culture. If stars and stripes offend you or you don't like Uncle Sam. Then you should seriously consider a move to another part of this planet. We are happy with our culture and have no desire to change and we really don't care how you did things where you came from. This is our country, our land and our lifestyle. Our First Amendment gives every opportunity to do so. But, once you are done complaining, whining and griping about our flag, our pledge, our national motto, or our way of life, I highly encourage you to take advantage of one other great American freedom-the right to leave.

Now I recall that particular movie.
It involved a Ham operator that the by made friends with, and after the Ham died, I think, the boy tried using the equipment.
But it's been a number of years since I saw that one.

I saw "Frequency" on TV last week.
Complete rubbish!
No QRN / QRM. No PTT, Full duplex, and only one throwaway mention of the need to have licence, callsign etc.
NOT a good advert for ham radio at all!

There is fairly good Australian factual drama that was on South African TV about 10 years ago called "Cyclone Tracy". The story of how the Northern Territory capital, Darwin, was practically wiped out by a cyclone that was "not supposed to be there" on Christmas day in 1974. The only ham in town managed to rig up a random wire in the wreckage and call for help.

Hello Forum Members,

I need modern official radio frequency bands names (abbrevations and how to open them) from 0.01MHz up to 10 GHz.
Who can answer or give me full path link to source?
Please reply to my private email (see article header),

Is there a good radio-ham free online reference book in the Internet?
Better being (quasi)scientific because i need exact formulas for AM and FM spectrum and reciever NR, NF calculation.

Thank you,

I was always amazed at the way some HAMs tried to hop on the bandwagon as if Frequency was a big PR for HAM radio...

Anyway... Some time ago there was an old movie I saw, and I think it was one of the early 'docudrama' type things. About WWII and the bomb. Had to do with a HAM that was made suspect because radio signals were coming from his neighborhood... The film was old black and white, and looked to be made in the 40's, just after the war.
Didn't have that '50's feel' you get from movies starting about 51 or so when TV was poised to start expanding.

Hello Forum Members,

Who can answer me:
How to determine (formula=?) Noise Ratio (NR) and Noise Figure (NF) of some receiver if is given: S/N in the receiver input and S/N in the receiver output?
Temperature and bandwidth is unknown
(ie may be presented as parameter (if needed)).

A specialized agency of the United Nations (UN), the International Telecommunication Union (ITU), coordinates international standards, regulations, and promotes the efficient use of the spectrum to maximize the potential for telecommunications services worldwide. The ITU has established an international Table of Frequency Allocations that designates specific bands of frequencies for specific uses within different regions of the globe. Each of the 188 member countries is entitled to participate in biannual World Radio Conferences (WRC) to review and revise regulations and standards. Although each country retains its sovereign right to regulate the spectrum differently within its own borders, the ITU Radio Regulations have Treaty status, and Conference results are ratified by Congress. Neighbouring countries frequently negotiate special agreements that apply to their common borders, but the ITU regulations generally form the core of the regulations of its member nations.

For more information about the ITU, visit http://www.itu.int

Note: They make a charge for copies of official ITU spectrum planning documentation.

No. If you post to a Usenet Group, you should be prepared to make the effort to come back and look for the replies.

All radio-ham books are quasi-scientific. You need a professional radio communications textbook.

Uhm... the movie was meant to be a paid advertisement for ham radio just as much as Apocalypse Now is supposed to be an ad for joining the US Army.

As for full duplex - that's Hollywood for you. In their world cars start without keys, no one closes the door behind him, automatic machine gun fire misses the lead actor from five feet, people always enter dark areas when chased by a killer, spilling coffee on keyboards causes nuclear meltdowns, and so on...

Actually, before I got my license, I monitored a distress call from a ship

I haven't heard much in band 1, but there is a strong signal at the bottom of band 2; it's everywhere, anyone any ideas what it might be? It does seem to be modulated at a rate of one cycle every 24 hours!

Ovis has nothing to do with the Altopia posts, and I've heard any complaints will be sent to dev/null. BWHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA. you lose again, Faggot

But you've always been anti-free speech when you are losing a flame war as evidenced in:

From: Rev Turd Fredericks <turdfred@catholic.org>

"Stagger Lee is anti-free speech because he originally came in here demanding that Steve Geilda, a regular in this group, cancel Roger Wiseman's account on his server because he didn't like what Roger was saying. That is anti-free speech."

"Since free speech is one of the foundations of the American constitution and America it's self, if you are ant-free speech, you are by defintion anti-American."

After the CIA leaked Mara's boobie pics to an international spy ring,
Turd Fredericks wrote this note denying any responsibility:

"The guy (Stagger Lee) is a total idiot. To give you a little background, he criticizes cotse for not cancelling accounts of people he doesn't agree with, I shot back with something calling him an idiot for not being able to learn how to use a kill file, and he starts calling me stupid and that I am supporting thugs and terrorists (or something like that). Eventually, I managed to get rid of him, but now, for whatever reason, he has come back and is forging posts in my name. I would killfile him, but it's more fun to watch him dance :-)"

And when Faggot Lee sent whinygrams to Cotse's owner the response was:

From: Stephen K. Gielda <steve@cotseNOSPAM.com>
<MPG.14f8c0c6d9215288989a3b@news.supernews.com>
"Cotse does not care about flamewars, unless they violate our policies.
You are involved in a flamewar and you want to win it by terminating your opponents account."

Faggot Lee pretends he has a ham call, he's really too chickenshit to give one, even if somehow he could cheat the exam and actually get a license.

Faggot Lee pretends to actually "know" things, (despite evidence to the contrary) just like when he "claimed" that Kevin Mitnick "posted" to alt.2600 newsgroup, the regulars responded with in 3b21a9f5.1576859@news.irvn1.occa.home.com:

"First off, you don't know what a real hacker is which is pretty much evident from you mentioning Kevin Mitnick, he got caught being a criminal, not a hacker. Kevin Mitnick was in prison for several years, and until recently, as a condition of his parole, he was prohibited from using a computer, or even talking about them, so it's pretty much a given that he is not posting here. If he was, he sure as hell wouldn't be calling himself Kevin Mitnick. Emmanuel Goldstein has enough troubles, and has an all consuming lawsuit to deal with, I doubt he has the time or energy to post here, or anywhere for that matter. I don't know who the hell Susan Thunder is, but it doesn't really matter, because there are enough knowledgeable people that post here to more than make up for some mythical "superhacker". If you don't like the FAQ, write a new one, I'll be waiting to see if you can do better.
The porn postings are beyond the control of this group, and are being dealt with at the ISP level. You should know as well as I that you can not control what is posted to a newgroup, although I know you would like to control it. This in it's self makes you an idiot.

What further makes you an idiot, is that you have now insulted just about everybody in this group (alt.2600) with your statements. I hope you have a good firewall."

Rogie is angwy. SO angwy. His two kids are being raised by another man. A REAL man who treats them as his own. Rogie's kids hardly ever contact him and his ex wife refuses to talk to him at all. Yes, Wogie is vewy, vewy

Do your own research, you lazy fuckwad and fuck off, butt-plug.
But like the "research" you did investigating the terms "libel" and "slander," there's not much hope for you to get ~anything~ right.

Faggot Stagger Lee, who fails to "grasp" the concept that "slander" is

A ham operator near Roger informs us this is the source of Roger's bitter and sick outlook on life. Roger's kids have rejected him as a father and call their new step-dad "Dad." Moreover, Roger's ex-wife has found happiness and respect from a real man who cherishes her. The scars of her relationship with Roger have finally healed. Roger ran home to live with his mommy Big Marie and act out his hatred and anger in some sick and sordid spew of perversion and child pornography that Roger posts daily on Usenet. Roger's kids consider another man their Daddy, and Roger's ex-wife is happy. Oh, but how angwy angwy Wittle Woger is. He will cwy cwy cwy to Mommy Big Marie tonight, then post more filth on Usenet. How sad. Get help Roger, get help somewhere but get help!

#Subject: Warning Notice: Amateur Radio License: KC8JBO
#Dear Mr. Wiseman:
#
#The Commission has monitoring evidence that you have been deliberately #and maliciously interfering with the radio operations of other licensed #Amateurs on the 14 MHz Amateur band. This interference has occurred at #various times in the last several months and includes broadcasting music #and other unidentified transmissions.
#
#The Commission generally relies upon the Amateur Radio Service to be #self-policing. Operation of the type described above is contrary to the #basis and purpose of Amateur Radio and degrades the service for #legitimate users. This serves as a Warning Notice that such operation #will not be tolerated. Additional incidents of operation of the type #described above will result in a monetary fine being levied against you #and in revocation proceedings before an Administrative Law Judge.
#You are requested to contact me at 717-338-2502 to discuss this matter.

It's a reasonable question how much Woger could have paid in "a monetary fine", though....perhaps Woger won't go on the air because he has nothing to say that won't bring Riley down on his fetid ass.

On Saturday morning, around 11:30 or so Jim, K2ECA was conversing on 14.275 with a group. At that time W4AMP checked in and made his comments. After AMP and ECA were finished, ECA called for the others to come back in. Nobody did. ECA was then heard to comment, "I don't know what happened to everybody else. We had a pretty good group out here a minute ago."
I have news for Mr. New Jersey...Jim, the other Hams left because they want nothing whatsoever to do with W4AMP. Simply put, they do NOT like him! You'd think that you would have been smart enough to deduce this all by yourself. W4AMP has earned a poor reputation for many, many reasons. Do not for a minute delude yourself that he is your friend. He has no friends. AMP is like a snake...unpredictable and untrustworthy. He will turn on you in a second and do so for no apparent reason.
As one poster said to Dan, "You are known by the friends you keep."
Good advice, this.

Roger will surely rebut your post. His typical comment goes something like,
"That's old news." or "That was three years ago.", etc.
The fact remains that Roger is one of the few, the proud, the retested.
This he cannot rebut. This, and the fact that he got caught intentionally jamming in the first place.

Do you suppose that she told your kids that you were a poor father figure and that you were abusive and a poor provider?

Poor Steve Turdeater, Nadless ATE White Gay Males, was snorting copius amounts of cocaine as usual and babbling on the so-called Liberty Net. His coke habit and inbred stupidity is why he couldn't hack college, even at that tenth rate community college he flunked out of. Thevie coun't hack but on and a half semesters there, before his grades were so low they couldn't even formulate a grade point average. Thevie then worked at the only job the senior Turdeater could get for his IDIOT son, and still works there but still goes back to the Turdeater tarpapered hovel in Richland, OH to cornhole his mommy. The coke-bottle-bottomed glasses wearing gopher face says he had a woman once, but "he let it go." Must have had something to do with the county agent and the PETA people got on his case for his beastiality perversion.

Chason, who's fucked his sister Julie is hardly an expert on anything.
I've been on the air, you insipid gay thing. Now run along and blow your boss at Honeywell in order to keep your job, because you consistently get poor performance reviews.

>[Letter of 9 Nov 1999 0letters/wisemanwarn.html]

So let me see if I have this straight. You're presenting a three year old letter that purports to prove someone as guilty of some offense. This three year old letter apparently being your idea of overwhelming evidence.

Let's examine your work:

A three year old warning letter, "may" indicate an impermissible activity ocurred, but by its nature is neither proof of the activity, nor guarantee of the validity of the evidence, if any.

So, just for the sake of argument, let's presume that three year old letter was some sort of indicator of wrongdoing. Of course, we can presume with equal validity that three year old latter was based on bad information and was therefore improperly presented.
Then your "overwhelming evidence" has slipped to zero. Nada. Zilch. Nothing.
Zippo.

So what was your purpose here? Just to tell another lie? Trouble is, you have Llloyd and the anonymous fuckwits all in a lather thinking something's happening and they (and you) doesn't have the mental horsepower to figure out what hooey it all is.

That is the lamest, most pathetic excuse for logic I have ever seen, Wee (Wiseman's usual unoriginal filth and child pornography edited)

So let's see what we have here. It appears Ray was able to actually prod Wiseman into posting something slightly different than Wiseman's usual plagiarism and unoriginal filth, but in actuality all Wiseman posted were his usual Clinton-style denials of "that's old news" "everybody does it" "everybody already knew that" "that's three years old."

Well Rogie Curtains boy, none of your Psycho-Babble changes an iota of the truth. You are mentally disturbed fruit who for several years maliciously jammed 14313, 3950, and many other frequencies with animal sounds, music, cat calls, white noise, profanity, etc.
UNTIL Riley cooperated with amateurs in you neighborhood to nab you, not once, but three times, resulting in your retest and violation letters. No matter how old the facts Curtains Boy, you can't alter the facts, and that is a fact Curtains Boy. For someone who claims to have more degrees than a thermometer, you are not very mature or even intelligent. Why don't you concentrate on learning how to be a real father to your kids, or is it that your kids have told you they never want to see again, that their new step dad is now their daddy.
Get help Wogey.....and come on over to 3947 or 3868 if you're not chicken shit and we'll square you away Curtains Boy!

Duffy,
I used to be an avid collector until one day it all stopped. Why? Because I had hit the jackpots of jackpots of QSLs. The name Ali Sekkat means nothing to the guys on this board ; in fact some may think he could be a terrorist. The truth is that he's an average Joe living in one of the most famous places in the world, CASABLANCA Morocco. His call is CN8TW.
My QSO with Ali occured on Apr.28,'98 on 14.300. Naturally I was excited over working him because "Casablanca" is not only one of the greatest of American films but my all time favorite. And upon receiving his QSL, I flipped completely and never sought another card from any ham, anywhere. Yes, the jackpot had been hit.

It's a standard sized QSL but....the front is glossy and replicates the actual theater billboard placard of the film.It shows Bogart wearing a trenchcoat and hat holding and pointing a revolver. Right under his necktie we read, "A Hal Wallis Production, "Casablanca." If you remember the film, it's from the scene in which he shot Nazi Major Strasser played by Conrad Veidt. In the background from left to right we see Ingrid Bergman, Paul Henreid, Claude Rains, Sidney Greenstreet, Peter Lorre and Ali Sekkat. Ali Sekkat? That's right. The fellow in my QSO had his likeness superimposed on the front of that card with the exact tone, shading etc. along with the one of the greatest film ensembles ever. THAT'S CLASS. Absolutely incomparable! Magnificent! Up to that time I had received thousands of cards and thought some were the cat's meow but all pale by comparison to the one from CN8TW. As a result, I knew no one could ever match it so I told every ham, "SAVE YOUR TIME AND MONEY. I DON'T WANT YOUR STINKING CARD. OF ALL THE STINKING GIN JOINTS IN THIS STINKING WORLD, YOU HAD TO WALK INTO MINE?"

Read my post again and you will see the 3 newsgroups that were in question, group. The thread appeared in more than 3 NG until I trimmed the fat and the question remains what does this have to do with amateur radio? Don't be Clearly, you haven't been reading r.r.a.m. or the other news groups to which the thread was cross posted.

The thread is about a low life ham who has been posting crap for years in several news groups. Since the thread is about a ham and his Usenet harassment and filth, plus his on the air jamming, it is unfortunately about ham radio.

You don't like it? I suggest that you use your OE news filters, or simply skip the thread. No one is forcing you to read it, and you sure as hell aren't going to get any of the participants to stop.

P.S. Don't be a smacked ass all your life.

Someday when I get the time I hope to have a whole album of qsl cards in my posession - the few real ones I do have are really nice - and frankly I don't have a printer high enough quality to print out eqsl's that look as good as professionally or semi-professionally created ones.

Hello,

The main used frequency on 6m seems to be 50.110 MHz. In nothern Europe there is a permanent carrier on this frequency (heard in France, UK, etc ...). This QRM heterodynes signals from 50.110 to about 50.115. Could it be possible for people to call CQ ABOVE 50.115 MHz ? Spread this info, TNX.

RE: Warning Notice: Amateur Radio License AF2Y

Dear Mr. Schwartzbard:

The Commission has monitoring information indicating that on January 13, 2000, you engaged in deliberate interference to the ongoing communications of licensees W4FQF and KB4MXL on the 20-Meter Amateur band. Such operation is contrary to the basis and purpose of the Amateur Radio Service, as set forth in Section 97.1 of the Commission's rules, 47 C.F.R. Section 97.1, and degrades the service for legitimate operators. Your attention is directed to the fact that this is your second warning regarding deliberate interference.

Please be advised that if legitimate complaints or our monitoring reveal additional instances of this behavior, we intend to designate your Amateur Station license AF2Y for a revocation hearing before an Administrative Law Judge, and further that we intend to designate your Extra Class operator license for suspension for the remainder of the license term, May 2, 2007.

Designation of your Amateur station license for revocation, and your Operator license for suspension for the remainder of term, means that you would have the right to appear at a hearing on the record before an Administrative Law Judge. The hearing would be held pursuant to the Federal Rules of Evidence and you would be allowed to submit evidence in response to the Bureau's case. Specific issues relating to your qualifications to be a Commission licensee would be detailed. The Bureau's case would consist of sworn testimony by witnesses and of documentary evidence, including monitoring evidence, both in its direct case and in any rebuttal presentation. You would be subject to cross-examination on any testimony or other evidence you submit.

At the conclusion of the hearing, proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law would be required to be filed by both parties, after which the Administrative Law Judge would render a written decision.

Additionally, we again caution you that airing personal conflicts with other licensees on the Amateur bands will result in the loss of your Amateur license.

Sincerely,

W. Riley Hollingsworth

CLIFTON, NJ: The FCC notified Amateur Extra licensee Charles Schwartzbard, AF2Y, on November 22 that Commission monitoring information continues to indicate that the licensee has been operating on 20 meters "emitting an unusually wide signal or one that is over-power, or both." Special Counsel for Amateur Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth told Schwartzbard the FCC has information indicating that the licensee "may have ignored requests from other licensees operating on adjacent frequencies to correct your transmitter emissions in accordance with good Amateur practice." Hollingsworth cited FCC rules prohibiting Amateur stations from occupying more bandwidth than necessary for the information rate and emission type in accordance with "good Amateur practice" and requiring amateur stations to use "the minimum power necessary to carry out the desired communications." Hollingsworth asked Schwartzbard to certify that he has read and understood those sections of Part 97, which he enclosed. The FCC also requested information from Schwartzbard regarding his use of a linear amplifier, automatic level control, an microphone gain settings for his home and mobile 20-meter operations, as well as other relevant information. Hollingsworth cautioned the licensee that failure to respond fully and completely in a timely manner could result in administrative sanctions. Hollingsworth further cautioned the licensee that "airing personal conflicts with other licensees on the Amateur bands, or slander or deliberate interference of other licensees will result in the loss of your Amateur license."

Roger laughs at a parent who lost his daughter. That goes way beyond "words" and is deserving of legal action. It proves what a low life Roger is:

In message <a4rsdh$4p6$5@dosa.alt.net>, KC8JBO attempted to justify taunting a parent about his daughter's death by saying "Cruelty deserves cruelty. An eye for an eye. I laugh at the pain I give them. It warms my heart. Their pathetic insults don't hurt me at all. It's funny what I do to make them dance. I OWN their sorry asses. And always will."

FCC, nor did I have to take another exam just to retain my license.

Turd Fredericks (as the name might hint) is a spankard. His hypocrisy was proven long ago by John Kimball, after which Mr. Fredericks ran away to hide. Your harrassment, defamation, and slander go entirely beyond the limitations placed upon free speech. You are a disgrace, and in fact YOU do damage to the concept of free speech.

Because you have almost no imagination, you post things like the following (which can be found as message <3ab97a3a_4@corp.newsfeeds.com> on Google):

"I'm sorry that you are a lonely, fat girl living in the mid west and only have corn husks to play with, if you know what I mean. Try and pick yourself up a life or some clue or something.

Understand what you speak of before you open your hotdog laden puss up and start yapping. Really. You seemed like a nice little twat, at first, but all this talk of libel makes you sound pretty damn obsessed. I guess you were stalked or libeled or something earlier in life, and it sounds like YOUR problem."

HAMVENTION 2002: AWARD WINNERS NAMED

The Dayton Hamvention has named Radio Amateur Information Network founder Alanson “Hap” Holly, KC9RP, as its 2002 Radio Amateur of the Year. Holly received the news of his selection on Thursday evening February 28th in a phone call from Cathi Hoskins, N8ZCQ, who chairs the Hamvention Awards and Banquet Committee. KC9RP tells Amateur Radio Newsline that he was completely taken by surprise:

Holly KC9RP: “I was absolutely stunned! In fact, all I could say was me? I mean seriously, I was just absolutely floored.”
--

Holly, lives in Des Plaines Illinois has been licensed since 1965. He began his ham radio informational programming career in 1984 on a local Chicago Area repeater. This eventually lead him to become founder, moderator and guiding light of a weekly amateur radio audio feature magazine known as the RAIN Report.

--
Sample audio from Rain Report.

RAIN programming is distributed to hundreds of repeaters across the country via a telephone dial-up line, the rainreport.com website, by a subscription tape service and broadcast over W-A-Zero-R-C-R's weekly 160 meter informational net.

But that’s is only a small part of the Hap Holly story. Originally licensed in Escondido California at age 14, Holly who has been blind since age 7 served as a phone-patch station and net control for the famed WESTCARS traffic net until 1970. He then headed off to Principia College in Illinois and from 1970 to graduation in 1974, ran phone patches and kept radio schedules for many of his fellow students.

Holly graduated Principia with a Bachelor of Arts degree in Sociology, and soon found himself in the Chicago area. There, he sought out world-class jazz accordionist Leon Sash, to pursue further training in music. As a professional keyboard player, Holly’s diverse repertoire of American music of the past six decades has made him a popular choice in the Chicago area.

Hap met his wife-to-be while he was teaching a class in non-visual perception to high school students at a summer camp in Buena Vista, Colorado. The two were married in August of 1976. Stephanie, who is sighted, received her ham ticket and KA9WKD callsign in 1986.

Over the years, Hap Holly has written articles for the Spec-Com Journal, Radio Scan Magazine and occasionally reports for us here on the Amateur Radio Newsline. Holly is also a common sight at the Dayton Hamvention, taping forums which are then incorporated throughout the year into his RAIN Reports. And since 1975 KC9RP has been an honored member of the Des Plaines Lions Club. He has also been a member of the Des Plaines Toastmasters since 1976. He and Stephanie are also active with Des Plaines Illinois Emergency Medical Alert system.

Named as this years Hamvention Technical Excellence award winner is Alan Waller, K3TKJ, of Laurel, Delaware. Waller was chosen for his work that lead to the interfacing the Internet to Amateur Radio.

First licensed in 1961, Waller combined his decades-long love for Amateur Radio and a burgeoning interest in the then-new Internet to design and manage the www.qsl.net and www.qth.net web sites. That was back in 1993. Since that time, Alan Waller's web sites have come to serve the needs of tens of thousands of ham radio operators worldwide by providing a vast technical reference platform, an electronic mail service, web page hosting services, and links to thousands of other ham radio related sites. And in the true spirit of the Amateur Radio, Waller's initial work utilized leading edge experimentation to see what could be done with the technology then available. This has developed into a mature, reliable service to the world wide ham radio community.

Rounding out this seasons winners are a pair of pair of space exploring hams who have been named as co-recipients of the 2002 Hamvention Special Achievement Award. Former astronauts Owen Garriott, W5LFL, and Tony England, W0ORE, are being honored for paving the way for manned ham radio operations from the space shuttles that has made ham radio a permanent part of mans exploration of space.

Owen Gariott, W5LFL was first. On November 28, 1983, Garriott, was launched into space aboard the space ship Columbia for the STS-9 mission. It was the Spacelab 1 mission and Garriott brought along the first Amateur Radio station on a crew-tended space vehicle. It was a simple Motorola hand held transceiver connected to a special antenna designed to fit in the Space Shuttle’s window.

Three days later, W5LFL came on the air and hams across the United States and around the world were witness to a historic radio transmission:

Owen Garriott W5LFL: “This is W5LFL in Columbia. W5LFL in Columbia orbiting the Earth at an altitude of 135 nautical miles passing over the U.S. West Coast and calling CQ.”
--

Among those who heard Owen Garriott's Amateur Radio transmissions from space was Lance Collister, WA1JXN of Frenchtown Montana. Collister, who is now W7GJ, is credited with being the first amateur to work an astronaut in orbit. Take a listen:

--
Lance Collister WA1JXN/W7GJ: “W5LFL on Columbia, WA1JXN, W-A-1-Japan - Xray-Norway, WA1JXN Frenchtown Montana standing by.”

Owen Garriott, W5LFL: “Hello W1JXN, WA1JXN, WA1-Juliet-Xray-November. This is W5LFL. You’re our first contact from orbit. WA1JXN, how do you read? Over?”
--

The success of Garriott’s mission lead to the development of SAREX -- The Shuttle Amateur Radio Experiment. And, over the years, SAREX permitted youngsters in classrooms around the world to speak directly with astronauts in space. But for this to happen, the technology of manned ham radio operations from space had to be enhanced. This aspect of the then new SAREX program fell to the next ham radio operator orbited: Tony England, W0ORE.

W0ORE flew into space on the shuttle Challenger in 1985. It was Mission 51F, Spscelab 2. In addition to the 2 meter FM voice gear, Tony England also had with him the first ever ham television station to go into space. Slow Scan yes, but capable of sending back high resolution images which hams on the ground equipped with SSTV gear could view live or record on a simple audio cassette for later viewing and historical archiving. From space, Tony England described the station he was using:

Tony England, W0ORE: “Essentially we’ve got a commercial TV camera that anyone could go out to their local radio store ant buy. We feed this into a scan converter built by a commercial outfit and modified by NASA Amateur Radio clubs and this takes a snapshot of the scene and digitizes it and put it in a memory.

Then its sent to a handie-talkie like this. From there we will send it over a wire up to the upper window upstairs and to this antenna when I get it up there in the window. Then it will be transmitted to the ground.

When we get going, we will be able to send color TV images of what we are doing on board as a series of snapshots updated every 10 or 20 seconds. Amateurs anywhere on the ground will be able to receive them, and ones with scan converters will see the pictures.”

That flight also marked another first. The first ever two way television -- ham radio television -- to and from space.

Tony England went on to flight prove both the improved FM voice and then new SSTV systems. The SSTV was so successful that NASA gave very serious consideration to a permanent installation on all shuttles for back up communications. More important, the early on-orbit operations by Own Garriott W5LFL and Tony England W0ORE made possible the thousands of educational contacts between children in school classrooms and the crews flying in space. First, on board the shuttles, and now as a permanent part of the International Space Station.

Hap Holly KC9RP, Alan Waller K3TKJ, Owen Garriott W5LFL and Tony England W0ORE will receive their honors at the Hamvention Awards Banquet slated for Saturday evening, May 18th at the Nutter Center in Dayton Ohio. Amateur Radio Newsline will be there to bring you this story and all the news about Hamvention 2002. (ARNewsline™ from Dayton Hamvention® news release. Vanity license processing is getting back on tract. According to a Legaue bulletin the FCC now has all outstanding vanity applications filed last October in hand and is ready to resume routine vanity processing. Until recently a single missing vanity application had been holding up a backlog of more than 2000 vanity applications. The FCC credits the ARRL in part with helping to locate applicants and resolving the problem. (ARRL, FCC)

RESCUE RADIO: AMATEUR RADIO EMERGENCY COMMS SUMMIT

The first ever Amateur Radio Emergency Communications summit was held in Indianapolis last week. Amateur News Weekly's Jack Parker, W8ISH, reports on the success of this first meeting.

They came from the Red Cross, Salvation Army, ARES, RACES and even CB-radio's REACT team. Two dozen representatives of different Amateur Radio emergency communications groups met in a Federal Building training room to find ways of helping local and state emergency management organizations. The summit was organized by Marion County ARES director Mike Palmer, N9FEB. Palmer cited a need to develop better communications and cooperation between the different groups.

Many amateurs wear two or three different hats when it comes to providing public service. Palmer wants to identify those who are willing to help and to better utilize the voice and data communications available in the Marion County Amateur Radio Community. Many of the summit participants agreed this type of effort is long overdue.

Members of Army-Navy and Air Force Mars, as well as the Indiana Wing of the Civil Air Patrol offered their services during times of disaster. Everyone agreed this was a good start and look forward to future efforts to better train and organize Amateur Radio Emergency Communications in Marion County and Central Indiana.

Reporting from Indianapolis for Amateur News Weekly, this is Jack Parker W8ISH.

According to Jack, everyone came away from the meeting knowing that cooperation between groups is a key element in providing better service to the public. (ANW)

RADIO RULES: FCC ADOPTS AMBER EAS EVENT CODE FOR CHILD ABDUCTION CASES
The Federal Communications Commission has announced the adoption of a Report and Order amending the Emergency Alert System rules. Included are several new EAS event and location codes, which broadcast stations and cable systems may use to alert the public in the event of state and local emergencies. Of these, a new Child Abduction Emergency event code may be the most interesting to hams involved in Search and Rescue and who have E-A-S decoders installed in their repeaters.

The plan is described as a voluntary partnership between law enforcement agencies and the media that will be used to alert the public of serious child abduction cases where police believe that the child is in danger of bodily harm or death. Under the plan, radio and television stations will be permitted but not required to interrupt programming to disseminate information concerning serious child abductions when the new Child Abduction Emergency code is received. It could also be used by hams as an automated call to action to help find a missing child if used to activate an E-A-S equipped Amateur Service repeater.

Police departments say that every minute counts in dealing with an abducted child situation. In adding the Child Abduction Emergency code the FCC says that its responding to public concerns. (FCC)

ENFORCEMENT: FCC COMPLETES GEORGIA ARRL VEC EXAM SESSION AUDIT

The FCC has wrapped up an investigation into apparent irregularities at five ARRL VEC-sponsored Amateur Radio examination sessions in Georgia during 2000 and 2001. As a result of the probe, FCC Special Counsel Riley Hollingsworth says that several examinees will be called back for partial retesting:

Riley Hollingsworth: “We determined reviewing all of the information that was brought to our by the League that eight examinees will have to be retested on the code element. The ARRL has also relieved ten VE’s of their duties as volunteer examiners.”
--

According to the ARRL Letter, all V-E’s who might have been involved were suspended after the FCC investigation began last year. (FCC, RAIN)

ENFORCEMENT: A REPEATER OUTSIDE OF THE BAND

The FCC is also looking at the operation of repeater in the Metro New York City area. Again, the FCC’s Riley Hollingsworth:

Riley Hollingsworth: “We opened an inquiry into allegations that an uncoordinated repeater operated by Thomas Batista, KC2DDD, and Gerardo Arias, N2IFU, in Corona and Staten Island New York. Now that repeater is not only causing interference to a coordinted repeater, but the input is apparently on a frequency not even allocated to the Amateur band. So, needless to say we are real interested in reviewing that response when it comes in.

What Hollingsworth will be looking for is an answer to why the machine is using 143.020 MHz as an input frequency as well as why its on the air without coordination. 143.020 MHz is a full 800 Kilohertz below the bottom edge of the 2 meter Amateur band. (FCC, RAIN)

HAM RADIO POLITICS: NCI LEADER CALLS FOR ELECTIONS

Bruce Perens, K6BP, the founder and an incumbent director of No Code International says that its time for new directions for the group and has called for elections. Amateur Radio Newsline's Norm Seeley, KI7UP, has more:

According to Bruce Perins, K6BP, when he started NCI in 1997, he never dreamed that it's goals would be achieved so quickly. But says Perins; "we are most of the way there."

Perins notes that last year the International Amateur Radio Union voted to ask for the removal of the international treaty provision requiring Morse Code testing for Radio Amateurs. Now Perins observes that even ARRL has voted in favor of removing code requirements from the international Radio Regulations.

With what he terms as -- no remaining credible opposition to NCI's cause left on the international level -- Perins says that it is time to turn NCI's focus to domestic policy. He says that for NCI to take an appropriate role in the end-game of the no-code battle means cooperation with national societies like the American Radio Relay League. And to do this, Perrins believes may take some new people.

So Perins has asked that an election for new directors be held no later than April 30th of this year. He also says that any person who was an NCI member on December 31, 2001 can be a candidate for director, and is eligible to vote in the election.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Norm Seeley, KI7UP.

More information about No Code International is on the web at www.nocode.org. (ARNewsline with information from K6BP)

In D-X, word that Dave Cree, G3TBK, has returned to work in the Caribbean. Throughout March Dave will be active as J88DR from St. Vincent. For the first two weeks of April look for him J3 slash G3TBK from Grenada. Operations will be on all bands, but concentrating on the WARC bands, mostly on C-W, but with some SSB. QSL to Dave's home call either direct or via the RSGB bureau. (RSGB)

The New Zealand Amateur Transmitters Society is warning hams world wide of what they say is a pirate operation. According the NZART News, a maritime mobile station using the callsign ZL2TO and the name Tony has been heard recently operating on nets on 15 Meters. This station currently gives his location as the Cape Verde Islands. Only one problem. The ZL2TO call sign is allocated the Waitara Amateur Radio Club. (NZART)

And the South Africa Radio League news service says that anyone who has held a QSO's with 7Q8 slash ZS6GH or C9 slash ZS6GH should write them off . SARL says that these have been declared null and void because license or authorization to operate was issued by the telecommunications regulators in Malawi or Mozambique. (SARL)

THAT FINAL ITEM: NOMINATIONS SOUGHT FOR THE YOUNG HAM OF THE YEAR AWARD

And finally, we started this weeks newscast with a story about awards. Lets end it on a similar note as we here a Amateur Radio Newsline officially open the 2002 nominating season for our own Young Ham of the Year Award.

The Young Ham of the Year award was created in 1986 by amateur Radio Newsline producer Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF, to fill what he viewed as a void where younger members of ham radio society were often overlooked:

Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF: “When I was a young ham in the 50’s and 60’s the good deeds of young hams were often overlooked and ignored. When I grew up I was fortunate enough to be in a position to remedy this and thats how the Young Ham of the Year Award program came about. Thats how it came into being”

The award as originally envisioned as very low budget. One idea was for a certificate that would be mailed to a ham, age 18 or younger who had shown some exceptional ability or performed some heroic deed that set him or her apart from the crowd. When Bill mentioned the idea to Chip Margelli K7JA, of Vertex Standard back in the company’s days as Yaesu USA, the idea quickly expanded. Margelli offered company support on the spot:

Chip Margelli, K7JA: “When Bill Pasternak gave me a call and dsescribed the project to me in the tiniest bit of detail it was obvious that this was a no-brainer and something that we as a company at Yaesu wanted to encourage. So, I jumped at the opportunity to be a major contributor and it has been a great project ever since.”
--

The award now had substance, but it lacked a permanent home. One was found in 1993 when it was invited to the Huntsville Hamfest:

Bill Pasternak, WA6ITF: “The way we got to Huntsville? Simple. We advertised. We put a notice into the newscast that we were searching for a permanent home. The answer came in a note from Scotty Neustadter, now W4WW, who is the Huntsville Hamfest Chairman. Scotty basically said bring it to Huntsville. And we did.”
--

While the presentation ceremony did go to Seaside Oregon in 1994, it returned to Huntsville in 1995 where it has been ever since. And in 1996 a second major corporate underwriter came on board. C-Q Magazine. Rich Moseson W2VU, is editor:

--
Rich Moseson, W2VU: “We at CQ have always thought that it is very important to promote Amateur Radio to young people and we saw that co-sponsorship of the award was the way to help do that.

What CQ did was to add to the Young Ham of the Year awards chest something very special. A week of fun and excitement at Spacecamp. Today, with corporate sponsorship from Vertex-Standard USA and CQ Magazine, and support from countless others including the ARRL, Dave Bell Associates and Rosewood Communications the Young Ham of the Year Award continues to honor the Amateur Radio related achievements of those hams age 18 or younger. And now its time to find a fitting recipient for 2002.

Full details, rules and a nominating form are available right now on our website at www.arnewsline.org. Just scroll down to the Young Ham of the Year Award area and click to download. Or you can send a self addressed stamped envelope to the 2002 Newsline Young Ham of the Year Award, 28197 Robin Avenue, Santa Clarita California 91350 and we will mail back the materials.

The Amateur Radio Newsline Young Ham of the Year Award is a one of a kind. It honors the youth of ham radio and in doing so, we hope it helps to insure a bright future for the hobby and the radio service that all of us love. (ARNewsline™)

Well I am one of the few who seems to remember 72 ohm ribbon line. It looks suspiciously like zip cord speaker wire. Here's what I would try. seperate, with a knife obout 2 inches of the two conductor cable then pull it apart for a total length of about 12 feet (468/40 = 11.7) for resopnance about the center of 30-50 mhc. Then connect thw two at the opposite end to your radio. One to the antenna connection the other to ground. Tie insulators or nylone rope the the two and you split and hang as a dipole.

I have a local noise problem I am hoping someone can help me track down. I hear

S-6 or 7 loud, 'coarse' has on all HF bands, on all frequencies, though the intensity of noise diminishes somewhat on higher bands. On 40M, my main band, it is all but intolerable, making QSOs with all but the loudest stations difficult, even at 12 WPM or so.

The noise comes on for exactly 2' 15", and goes off for exactly 1' 25". Over and over. I have timed it many times over two weeks. The noise is only there after dark. Aha! But I have searched and searched for an intermittent streetlight, to no avail. I have gone about three blocks in all directions from the house in this search, and also looked for automatic driveway/porch lights nearby, but can't find any. What the &*%$ can this be!?? I am really puzzled by the exact timing, since it would seem that a streetlight malfunctioning wouldn't do this, and a driveway light might stay ON for a specific time, but not off! HELP!

Seems like a real problem when a noise comes on for two feet and fifteen inches which is three feet and three inches and stops for one foot and twenty five inches which is the same as three feet and one inch. This linear noise problem could be related to a metal yardstick coming into contact with a framus. Perhaps it's all related to cw? Get off code and move up the bands on phone or call your utilities company. Have you ruled out every noise source that may be within your own home? Or go to your neighbors and politely ask if they might be using something that nightly comes on for three feet and three inches.....etc. to which they call an ambulance to cart you off to the funny farm thereby ending your personal relationship with the noise.

Sorry to see that you've received useless "answers" from people who are not the sharpest tacks in the hobby. Let me try to give a serious answer to your post.

I have dealt with similar noise problems, and found at least one way to solve them that might interest you.

You may need to go on a "noise hunt" if the problem persists. One of the cheapest tools you can use to find noise such as that you described is a small transistor radio which uses a ferrite core antenna to receive the standard broadcast band. Chances are good that you'll hear the noise there too.

A ferrite core antenna is a magnetic antenna and has a fairly sharp null roughly in the direction of the axis of the antenna windings. You can pop open the radio and look at the antenna, or you can simply fool with the radio's spatial orientation until you get a feel for the direction of the null. After that, you can begin to use the radio to triangulate on noise in the broadcast band, or even to follow the noise along power lines by tracking the loudest signal.

That method has worked pretty well for me a number of times, although you may sometimes accidentally start trying to track things in the middle of the noise field. In that case, it's very difficult to find a preferred direction, and you need to go further away from the noise in order to get a good start on locating it.

One of the more hidden noise sources I found with that method was a ceiling light dimmer switch that had started to fail. The internal SCS was putting so much switching noise on the power lines that I could pick it up from several houses away. Replacement of the $8 wall switch cured the problem.

P.S. AF2Y is apparently so bereft of technical skills that he was only able to give a flip answer to your question. My apologies.

question:

I have a Tech Plus license. I read awhile ago that I can renew this license and get an upgrade to General, due to changes in the regulations.

How do I do that? Just fill out a 605? Is there a special box or form to add with it?

Thanks. Ruthann, WB6PHK

Assuming you qualify as a 'paperwork General' - not all Tech Pluses do -- and can prove it, you do it thru the VE process. For the same ten bucks, take element 4.

Suggest contacting your friendly neighborhood VEs to clarify the process.
Judging from the callsign you qualify.

No, Doc! Not THAT! Say it ain't so!
I SO wanted one of your QSL cards, too!
Just when I was on the verge of obtaining a QSL card from everybody Riley had notified, you have to dash my hopes of completing my collection.
Can I have one? Please? Please?

Please, Doc? Please? Pretty Please?
Oh. Don't worry Doc. I won't stink up your lovely place.

This seems at first glance to be a rather lifeless outing from the artist now known as AB8MQ. Nothing jumps out and makes the reader want to slap or strangle the computer screen. No libel or slander, no trademark PSYCHOTIC random CAPITALIZATION of invectives that have often been favorably compared to the "POW" and "ZAP" of old Batman TV series graphics. One wonders if he was simply off his game, or perhaps, if he was instead challenging his core audience who had grown all too familiar with his distinctive style.

No doubt there is subtle irony in the fact that although this work weighs in at a featherweight thirty words, the theme is fatness. "Huh fat boy" makes an appearance in the first sentence, and this theme is revisited less than, well, less than one sentence later with the comparison to not just a big hog, but a "big overstuffed hog." Given the consistency of these phrases the final "those pants looked like they had been slept in for a week" blast seems to be a mere afterthought. Gone, at least for this posting, are the crowd-pleasing references to bestiality, coprophilia, coprophilia, and coprophilia.

So is this a new direction for AB8MQ? Is this a sign that he is turning his back of his legion of fan? Or is this an experimental artistic muscle-flexing of an artist in full? Or is it a pitiful bleating from a gin-soaked, redneck sack of cattle snot who should have his genitals ripped off with a Taco Bell Spork(tm)? Only time will tell. At this point, "Re:moderator" is a minor work of indistinct subtleties from a major force to be reckoned with on the professional USENET flaming circuit.

To posit that Roger is subtle would be a misunderstanding. Roger's muscle flexing, as you say, is not even that, either. He is much too flaccid to flex much of anything other than his fingers.

Yes, Wiseman bleats. He bleats the same spew over and over and over. He only differs his rants in that he shuffles the vitriol from sentence to sentence. Result? Same old spew. Same old Roger. Rearranged. Over and over and over again.
Roger's command of some of the lesser-known invectives does give the reader a healthy suspicion that Roger often reads books that are not available at the local book stores...if you get the jist. He seems fairly well-versed, but again, only with the kinds of books that are available behind a bright red and yellow storefront sign that says, "Pleasureland Museum".
Roger refers to "fatman", "Orass", etc. simply because he has not the slightest idea of who is posting what. He takes these weak shots in the dark time after time. He hasn't a clue.
So there you have it.
Roger is for all intents and purposes a virtual nonentity. A nobody with a filthy mouth.
Beyond Usenet he does not exist. HIt the Delete key and he is gone.
Poof! Goodbye, Roger.

How about a malcontent such as radiosigs who claims to be a dentist?
Get the picture now?
Of course anybody can call themselves "doc".
Anybody can call themselves Captain.
Anybody can call themselves Major.
Heck, I could even call myself a Doctor of Jurisprudence to fend off any lawsuits that a Doctor of Dentistry threatens to send my way.
Of course there is no Doctor of Dentistry out here...only a putz with no credibility.
Besides...dentists have no need to obtain a PhD. Give 'em two years in a Sear's Junior college and they will soon be running amok...calling themselves "Doctor" and such.
Dentists are only one step removed from licensed massage therapists...or akin to Chiropractors...they all call themselves "Doctor".
Self-aggrandizement is the term. Being a real Physician is beyond their grasp.

"Stagger Lee" <SLee@houston-hunks.com> revealed what a hypocrite he is and ironically admits he has no credibility in message

<3C36FDCC.76EC185D@houston-hunks.com> :

"Therefore, I find your story difficult to believe. Your own anonymous status makes the story even less credible."

Will, you're getting a totally useless answer from Faggot Lee, who is known to cheat other hams. Since by his own criteria, his anonymous status lends no credibility to his comments, you should take them as such.

Your qrn problem is intermittent, and sounds like perhaps one of your neighbors has something hooked up on a timer and is causing the interference. Perhaps something to do with their fish tank or some such situation.

Woger Curtains Boy, in his relentless pursuit of his Master's Degree at Glendale Valley Tech, coined yet more additions to the English language, for which his mentor professor will commend Laddie Boy Roger.

"fuycking" and "realising"

Why Woger, these new words are sure to keep you on the

And "flaming", according to our resident, self-styled practitioner has rules (read the FAQ Elmo!) which are all neatly written down and which somehow must be obeyed if you want to be a genuine flamer. Never mind that Roger was roundly humiliated by the other so-called flamers in their own news groups when they handed out the annual alt.flame awards.

Since they laughed at Roger, why those folks don't count. They were

I really don't understand what is so hard to grasp about this concept.

If you read Part 97, it is not illegal to buy, own, build, or use Ham equipment to receive Ham radio communication. The only thing that requires a Ham license is to TRANSMITTING on Ham frequencies, same as any other service.

No, if you resell a radio, you don't have to check if the buyer is licensed. It would be wise to inform the buyer that a Ham license is required to transmit on those frequencies, but it is up to the buyer to get the required license or to refrain from transmitting.

Now, I haven't read Part 97 recently, so if I am wrong, I would be most interested in the part of Part 97 or any of the FCC R&Rs that proves that I am wrong.

You are 100% correct. The discussion centered on the supposed Radio Shack policy to not sell ham equipment (HTs/transmitters/transcievers) to non-hams. No one ever provided any validation that RS was not sellling to anyone...licensed or not...as my example and others stipulated above..

Additionally, this discussion periodically pops up when someone suggest that it should be illegal to sell to non-hams or for non-hams to purchase or possess ham HTs/transmitters/transcievers.

Cheers,
Bill K2UNK

One would expect Faggot Lee to agree with 'Doh, since he's another one too fucking stupid to use a killfile. Not that he ~wants~ to use one, as Cotse's owner Steve Gielda points out in <MPG.14f8c0c6d9215288989a3b@news.supernews.com>:

"Stop it by killfiling , ignoring, and not playing the flame game. But, I don't believe that you want to stop the flamewar. This is evidenced by the crossposts to the nose and all kinds of other groups to fan the flames by you numerous times (not just this post)."

A First grade Primer is way over Faggot Lee's obtuse, oblonged head. He actually believes the revision history crap about how with the War with South slavery wasn't an issue. But, then Faggot Lee isn't the sharpest knife in the drawer, either.

I am having a problem with setting up a Tiny-2 TNC for mobile APRS. I had it all figured out and had the TNC up and running fine, but a couple of days ago, the memory defaulted back to a clean slate in the EEPROM (MYCall was NOCALL, etc.).

Findu.com shows my data string as:

Report received 2 days 4 hours 41 minutes 33 seconds ago

Raw packet:

I tried to use my limited notes since the TNC crash, but unfortunately I'm still down. The data below is how the TNC is set up right now. Can someone here please have a look at my settings and point out where I am set incorrectly? Thanks in advance.

I'm bored this morning, so I'll at long last answer your incessant, out-of-context quoting with a few quotes of your past posts, as retained on Google. A very casual search turns up many threats by ab8mq/kc8jbo

"Well, your post is harassment, so I've taken the liberty to report YOU to your ISP, your employer, and law enforcement." -- kc8jbo in message

"Whoooooo..is that supposed to be some sort of threat? Giganews.com, your ISP, will be notified of this thinly veiled threat." -- kc8jbo in message <8vbqi0nml1@nnrp1.deja.com>

"Maybe if you were'nt such a fucking DUMBASS, you'd know that blueriver.net your ISP has been getting all your posts. bye bye, Baby-raping faggot." -- kc8jbo in message <938lp1$m2o$1@nnrp1.deja.com>

"Your 'threatening', harassing posts have been forwarded to your isp.
bye, bye." -- kc9jbo in message <#OizurK9#GA.72@cpmsnbbsa03>

"The people onthe abuse team at your isp sure have been helpful." --

You're a fuckwit, this has already been proven, and even those in alt.2600 have said so when you tried to crosspost over there for support.

After the CIA leaked Mara's boobie pics to an international spy ring,
Turd Fredericks wrote this note denying any responsibility:

"The guy (Stagger Lee) is a total idiot. To give you a little background, he criticizes cotse for not cancelling accounts of people
he doesn't agree with, I shot back with something calling him an idiot
for not being able to learn how to use a kill file, and he starts calling me stupid and that I am supporting thugs and terrorists (or something like that). Eventually, I managed to get rid of him, but

Roger may be right here! Last year I started noticing bursts of noise every 30 seconds or so on 40 & 80. I started by unplugging everything in the house and then throwing the circuit breakers. No luck. After a couple of days, I discovered my neighbor had hooked up a new lawn watering and lighting system. I wrapped the wires exiting from the controller in several torroid cores. That fixed it. No more noise! Seriously, look to see what the neighbors are doing.

Those aquarium heaters and lights sometimes cause it, and since it has an

I carry a cellphone to make potential calls for emergency assistance while on wintertime solo forays into the backcountry all around Lake Tahoe and the Donner Pass area, but find there are some areas that lack cellphone coverage (e.g., Coldstream Valley).

Following up on an earlier thread in rsb, are there amateur radio repeaters with broad coverage within the full Tahoe/Donner Pass regions? Could this provide a kind of "radio-frequency 911" service? What sort of apparatus (and license) would I need? Would CB radio be an alternative?

(I don't want to communicate regularly with anyone, just have a way to call for emergency assistance; and I'm rarely more than 4 or 5 miles in from the roadheads around the Lake.)

I, too, had a similar situation. After weeks of searching (I try to not know my neighbors and am NOT nosy) I managed to narrow it down to a neighbor that was using a variable speed engraving tool in his garage. I only discovered this because the noise only seemed to occur when his garage lights were on in the evening and when he was intermittently using the tool. He has since discarded the engraver and moved on to an air-driven model. Result? No more QRN.

Doc, in his quest to be heard/seen above everybody else, set his date/time accidentally he would have been smart enough to catch it after the first such post.

Doc always claimed to be ahead of the times in all things technical.

One would expect Faggot Lee to agree with 'Doh, since he's another one too fucking stupid to use a killfile. Not that he ~wants~ to use one, as Cotse's owner Steve Gielda points out in <MPG.14f8c0c6d9215288989a3b@news.supernews.com>:

Naturally, you'll defer, because you're too fucking stupid to actually ~know~ any facts. You already proved that when you said that Kevin Mitnick posted to alt.2600 and was laughed out of there by the regular posters in the group. Time and time again, you've proven what a fuckwitted imbecile you are, a purveyor of free speech as long as they agree with you, and those that don't you try to get them kicked off their ISPs.

Below is just one example of Faggot Lee getting laughed and pointed at,
although with ~his~ appearance, I'm sure it happens a lot.

"Turd Fredericks" <TurdFred@cotse.com> spanked Faggot Lee in message
news:3b21a9f5.1576859@news.irvn1.occa.home.com...
"First off, you don't know what a real hacker is which is pretty much evident from you mentioning Kevin Mitnick, he got caught being a criminal, not a hacker. Kevin Mitnick was in prison for several years, and until recently, as a condition of his parole, he was prohibited
from using a computer, or even talking about them, so it's pretty much a given that he is not posting here. If he was, he sure as hell wouldn't be calling himself Kevin Mitnick. Emmanuel Goldstein has enough troubles, and has an all consuming lawsuit to deal with, I doubt he has the time or energy to post here, or anywhere for that matter. I don't know who the hell Susan Thunder is, but it doesn't really matter, because there are enough knowledgeable people that post here to more than make up for some mythical "superhacker". If you don't like the FAQ, write a new one, I'll be waiting to see if you can do better.
The porn postings are beyond the control of this group, and are being dealt with at the ISP level. You should know as well as I that you can not control what is posted to a newgroup, although I know you would like to control it. This in it's self makes you an idiot.
What further makes you an idiot, is that you have now insulted just about everybody in this group (alt.2600) with your statements. I hope you have a good firewall."

You are a fucking idiot, nothing more.
--
Faggot Stagger Lee, who fails to "grasp" the concept that "slander" is spoken and "libel" is written, would be better served if he just stuck to grasping nutsacks, incoherently babbled in <3C4AE592.6A0CDA7E@houston-hunks.com>:

"COTSE seemed to have the laughable notion that what Wiseman was doing was exercising freedom of speech. Slander is of course not protected speech in the US, but the concept that even free speech has its limits seemed to be impossible for Steve Gielda -- COTSE's owner -- to grasp."

Dunno about the original topic. Never looked at your qrz.com entry.

On Usenet, topics have a way of drifting, especially when Woger is making all of his noise with 150 line reposts of whatever he found in his trash folder. After Nacho Man Wiseman (who, by the way, "owns" us) entered the thread, it was at that point destroyed.

Or was it? Maybe it was dead from the start.

Anybody in the Hiram or Atlanta area have any job openings for a Computer Enjuneer? The applicant has a nine month "degree" from a store-front computer school and is available to start work any time.
Said applicant would prefer a job within walking distance since the old Thunderbird is barely operable and his other vehicles have no insurance. Applicant would also prefer to work in the proximity of a liquor store so as to be able to cash checks and buy the necessities of life.
The applicant has a GED, or so he states. Said applicant is also a War Hero of several campaigns during his few years as a reservist. Among the Applicant's alleged achievements are tours of duty in Lebanon while working as a Navy Seal, HALO (High Altitude, Low Opening) parachute drops into hostile areas where he stood off over 100 hostiles armed with only an M-79 grenade launcher and a slingshot while letting his buddies exit the area. He has a Silver Star, a Bronze Star, a Purple Heart, and an official Certificate of Lies.
Applicant also was allegedly involved in hostile action after the helicopter he claims he was riding in was shot down over Beirut. Applicant took evasive action to avoid capture and eventually returned to friendly lines after slitting the throats of several attackers.
Applicant now claims to suffer from PTSD and has visited a veteran's hospital in hopes of obtaining medication to quell his late-night tremors and flash-backs.

Roger, the Usenet lurker will soon be awakening from his slumber. He will arise from his mother's bed and trundle to the front window to see if any of the Lavender Lads have left any notes in his yard. After returning the curtains to their original position, Rog will then turn on his computer...first things first as they say...and he will view the over night posts and go berserk responding. His posts will be nothing new...same old filth...same old Roger.
Just watch..his posts will be only one to two minutes apart...then he will take a few minutes off to change his mother's diapers and change her bedding, but he will return!
After a few hours...church and all...he will return home and post a ton of filth in the afternoon. Of course his mother will be asleep by then and the doddering old gal will have no idea of what her slobbering son is up to.
No wonder Roger's wife took the kids and ran...she knew she had a dead-end loser.....
Look also for Doc, the ever-suffering Jewish martyr to post his unasked for thoughts.
Doc will wring his hands and Rogie will post his filth.
These two are of the same cloth....

Naturally, you'll defer, because you're too fucking stupid to actually ~know~ any facts. You already proved that when you said that Kevin Mitnick posted to alt.2600 and was laughed out of there by the regular posters in the group. Time and time again, you've proven what a fuckwitted imbecile you are, a purveyor of free speech as long as they agree with you, and those that don't you try to get them kicked off their ISPs.

Below is just one example of Faggot Lee getting laughed and pointed at,
although with ~his~ appearance, I'm sure it happens a lot.

"Turd Fredericks" <TurdFred@cotse.com> spanked Faggot Lee in message
news:3b21a9f5.1576859@news.irvn1.occa.home.com...
"First off, you don't know what a real hacker is which is pretty much evident from you mentioning Kevin Mitnick, he got caught being a criminal, not a hacker. Kevin Mitnick was in prison for several years, and until recently, as a condition of his parole, he was prohibited
from using a computer, or even talking about them, so it's pretty much a given that he is not posting here. If he was, he sure as hell wouldn't be calling himself Kevin Mitnick. Emmanuel Goldstein has enough troubles, and has an all consuming lawsuit to deal with, I doubt he has the time or energy to post here, or anywhere for that matter. I don't know who the hell Susan Thunder is, but it doesn't really matter, because there are enough knowledgeable people that post here to more than make up for some mythical "superhacker". If you don't like the FAQ, write a new one, I'll be waiting to see if you can do better.
The porn postings are beyond the control of this group, and are being dealt with at the ISP level. You should know as well as I that you can not control what is posted to a newgroup, although I know you would like to control it. This in it's self makes you an idiot.

What further makes you an idiot, is that you have now insulted just about everybody in this group (alt.2600) with your statements. I hope you have a good firewall."

You are a fucking idiot, nothing more.

I recently purchased a nice, used FT-101EE. The radio appears to be working except the AM receive is distorted. I recently read that there is a way to add a separate 6 Khz AM IF filter that will cure the problem but upon checking the prices of the Fox-Tango filters, I'd like to find an alternative (I paid less for the radio than the price they are asking).

Appreciate any thoughts here and thanks, in advance.

Even a Spanish-impared person like me can read most of that, including the question to Wiseman if he is crazy.

What I don't understand is the part where you seem to be asking him if he has a crazy Volvo or maybe a crazy vulva. Does Wiseman have a vulva?

I'd prefer to think of him with a Volvo.

But just in case, he can go to the web site http://www.bettydodson.com/vivala.htm, and join the celebration. There, you read "Now observe this group of courageous women, ages 25 to 68, gathered to honor women's sex organs with intimate images of their own vulvas. Hear women speak about the relationship they have with their genitals. Watch them trimming and shaping ..." <gag, cough>

I doubt Scheissman has any identifiable genitalia. He may have a 20-year old beat-up Volvo.

But _volver_ does seem more reminiscent of...well, you know...in the present tense (_vuelve_) than the future (_volver&#65533;_).

Please reply to: wn1z@winlink.org

Do not reply to the e-mail associated with this post; I access that infrequently.

FOR SALE: Yaesu FT-290R 2-meter all mode transceiver. Bought new in 1994. Has standard power amp on it; also has the C-cell battery pack, DTMF mike, mobile mount (screws missing), PL tone encode module.

When new i paid $700 for it.

It looks used; i took it backpacking a lot. Also, when it was new it would put out 25 watts on high, 10W on low. Now i'm getting 14-19 watts on high, 3-5W on low. That could be an adjustment needed.

Also i might be able to find the vinyl case & shoulder strap for it.

Asking $225 plus shipping. Price so low because of the low power output and the somewhat scratched and dusty appearance. Other than that it's a great radio. Most recently used it on FM for split-VFO operation -- packet thru ISS.

Contact me by e-mail at wn1z@winlink.org, NOT the e-mail i sent this posting with.

One way we could do the transaction is you send me $25 for shipping & then I mail it to you, U.S. Mail only, C.O.D. for the balance. (The balance being $225 minus the difference between $25 and my actual cost of shipping.)

I tried to use a Tiny-2 MkII and a generic TNC-2 compatible in a mobile situation.

The devices were very prone to an apparent re-initialisation of the configuration to some cold start values. I could improve both devices by installing brown out protection in the CPU reset area. The brown out protection is to prevent the CPU running when the voltage got too low to be reliable, and both TNCs suffered from that problem when the vehicle engine was cranked. While it improved things, the TNCs would still occasionally cold start.

This indicates to me that the way in which writes to RAM are handled are prone to power loss during the process and are inherently unreliable.

The best answer seemed to burn an EPROM with customised power on defaults.

I asked Paccomm if they had info on the data areas in the EPROM so that I might burn custom cold start values, but they didn't reply (no surprises there). I just put that down to experience like the other problems with the Tiny-2 (incorrectly wired modem disconnect header, charge pump capacitors installed incorrectly).

Bottom line is that the TNC-2 has more capability than required for APRS and common implementation (like the Tiny-2) are not robust. If you must use a TNC-2, find a ROM image that is usable for APRS and that has published cold start data vectors so that you can make sure it cold starts the way you need.

3217. BC100XLT repair

Can you tell me how to find this Q201 everyone seems to be talking about?
I have a BC100XLT that has all the symptoms of this seemingly coomon problem yet I dont know how to locate it on the board. Any help would be greatly apprciated. Someone HAS to have done this repair?! PLEASE HELP if at all possible.

Thanks,

Paul

Uniden/Bearcat BC200XLT Portable - Loss of Audio and Dial Lamp
If you can program frequencies into your BC200XLT but there is no audio and the green backlight no longer functions, a tiny transistor may have failed.
Check for a defective PNP surface mount transistor, Q201 (2SB815B6-YDY).
Q201 is used as a switch to furnish 8 VDC to several stages of the BC200XLT.
Its main purpose is to switch off power hungry stages of the BC200XLT when the CPU thinks the NiCd voltage has fallen below a threshhold. That's an attempt to limit the current drain on weak NiCds to avoid permanent damage.

Q201 is located on the foil side of the "Micom" board, adjacent to the black multi-pin connector which mates the Micom and main boards together.

Q201 can be destroyed by a few different causes, primarily, by something in the scanner drawing too much current through it. In one case, capacitor C36 shorted. It's a 220 uF 10v electrolytic, located on the component side of the main board, connected from pin 8 of the audio IC (IC2 NJM386SL) to ground. Capacitor C55 shorted in another BC200XLT. Gary Bean reports he substituted a 2SA1298 for Q201 and it worked fine. In a pinch you bypass Q201 by soldering a short piece of bare wire between the collector and emitter, but you must first fix the component which caused Q201 to fail

I own a Yaesu VX-5R and have managed to get it communicating at 1200bps AFSK using the Linux soundmodem. I am unable to establish 9600bps FSK to a radio in the same building!

Is the VX-5R not 9600bps capable? If anyone has any insight it is much appreciated.

Thanks

Generally, no standard FM rig is 9600bd capable unless it is included as a mod or a feature. 9.6K operation requires the audio to be taken directly off of the discriminator circuit.

You may want to post the request out on rec.radio.amateur.misc, although I haven't been on that group in a long time, so don't know what's happening over there.

Regarding licensing, the entry mode license is the Technician, obtained by passing a 35-question multiple-choice examination. No Morse code test is required. The exam covers basic regulations, operating practices, and electronics theory, with a focus on VHF and UHF applications.

Technician Class operators are authorized to use all amateur VHF and UHF frequencies (all frequencies above 50 MHz) which is used by virtually all repeater systems.

I don't belong to the organization, but www.arrl.org has a lot of info on ham radio available. There are other web sites and organizations that might be able to help.

Doing a google search for Tahoe Amateur Repeaters might actually yield some info, as well as Tahoe Amateur Radio Clubs or the like.

Regarding CB, it probably is not good for a backup. As far as I can tell, not many areas have active CB'ers apart from the truckers and freebanders (using "modified" CBs for illegal long distance radio communications), although I could be wrong.

Hi There,
first of all I really have to say, that i am not very keen on this topic, but still i think i could understand everything, so if i make some mistakes (and even if they are very silly) please say / write it.

So here we go:

I am trying to build my own RDF doppler, which uses 4 antennas, between which we switch several times per second. These antennas are built up on a circle, just like it is done on a lot of websites.

While swichting between these antennas, a little phase shift is generated, which is interpreted as a "high frequency" by an FM receiver. Now my problem is, that i want to filter these signals, but i think i only get a mess of signals.

I use my soundcard and coded a software in delphi, which displays the 4 "peaks" which are generated through the switching. (i used the 555 timer signal as a syncsignal, so that the pc always knows, when the switching is / was done)
The problem is, that i can't see any difference between a POSITIVE DOPPLER PULSE and a NEGATIVE DOPPLER PULSE. Do you have any ideas, what i could have done wrong?

I set up our board on my homepage, sorry, it's only the layout, not a schematic, but perhaps you can find the mistake.

http://www.homeworxx.de/platine.gif

if you want some more information, just tell it!

Thanks a lot

Malte

Hi all. I think I might be able to figure this out on my own, but I'd like to avoid reinventing the wheel if possible. I can't seem to find anything by searching on the web, so I'll ask here.

I want to get a speaker/mic made for ICOM/Maxon type handhelds to work with a Motorola commercial handheld. The Motorola is an LTS2000 and has the same speaker/mic as the GP300 series. Basically the speaker is always connected, and the PTT is just a switch in series with the microphone. The radio senses when you close the switch, and then goes into transmit. Any ideas? I'd like to build a seperate box to do the conversion, that way the speaker mic will work on both units.

Any and all help or pointers for info will really be appreciated. If possibly, can you also cc a copy of your reply to joshy@3mtmp.com? My newsgroup access is really bad.

Thanks in advance!

I have been recently toying with the idea of putting a dual band (2m/440) amateur rig in my car. To assess if the investment would be worth it (seeing as how I already have a mod'ed commercial 440 rig in my car for amateur and GMRS) I borrowed a friend's scanner and listened to many of the "active" frequencies in this area, the greater Cincinnati area. I found a few very active places, which got my hopes up until I started listening to the content of these channels.

It appears to me that the Greater Cincinnati area is "under siege" by a very few groups of amateurs. I noticed that the diversity in radio is nil the same people on all the used frequencies, and even thou they clam to be an "open" group if you listen to them new people with new ideas are ran off. On some of the repeaters just a normal conversation is cut off for tying up the repeater. On a clear sunny day not during peak traffic times why should a conversation on a Ham repeater that it observing the courtesies of normal ham communications (i.e. waiting for the repeater to drop so any other station calling could get in if they wanted to) be cut for the reason of wanting empty air. That to me sounds like non-effective use of frequency space.

Now that we are on frequency space let me just say that it seems a little excessive for one group to control six different repeater pairs across two different bands. Five of those in the 2m band alone. This to me sounds like a lack of diversity, and if you track some of there frequencies you will find that one of them is in a garage on a mag. mount antenna just to tie up the space so that no one else can use that space for a new repeater and haven forbid some new opinions and views.

If you live in or near Cincinnati you may know who I am talking about. CRA (Cincinnati Repeater Association) seems to be the only way to get on the air in this city, and if you try to put up a repeater of your own you will find that all the vhf pairs are taken. Now, if this group is truly interested in keeping ham radio alive they would welcome new people and points of view, but to the contrary if you disagree with any member of the group you will find yourself subject to jamming and "the cold shoulder" until you just give up. These people do not extent their damaging attitude into just a standard radio group, but the "leaders" of the group also seem to run all activity available to hams in this area like: Sky Warn Group, QCEN (Queen City Emergency Net), and ARPSC (Amateur Radio Public Service Corps). So as you can see if you want to do anything in this city in ham radio you have to subject your self to a group that I have heard, aptly referred to as the CRM (Cincinnati Repeater Mafia).

So you may ask, what can be done about such atrocities? Well I have added contact information to a key person at the bottom of this post if you know of anyone else who may help please let them know and if you would let me know and I will forward a copy of this letter to them so they may hear my argument as well. Please contact someone and let them know that the hams in Cincinnati are being oppressed by local radio groups of, and we would like to take the air waves back for the hams and not leave them to the death they are suffering here in this great city.

Roger will deflect being caught by posting more filth and perhaps drudging up his age-old accusation that we are too cowardly to post using our call signs. This, however, changes not the fact that Roger was caught yet AGAIN stealing the posts of others and claiming them as his own.
He continues to skirt the subject and I will NOT let it go away despite his efforts.

It's probably not wise to admit that you're trying to do things that are bad practice if not overtly illegal. It makes it harder for the "old guard" to take you seriously, even if you have a valid point(s).

What repeater was this on? How long were you talking? The rest of us might be listening. I don't know you personally...but I can say that I would tire of listening to even my closest amateur radio friends for a long period of time.

Maybe. But I don't think you have any MORE or LESS right to the frequencies than they do. If the repeaters are as idle as you say, isn't there plenty of bandwidth for you to spread your opinions and views. Of course, this is a two-way communications hobby, it's not about BROADCASTING your opinions and views.

I haven't heard you on the repeaters that I listen to, so I can't imagine that there isn't one for you to use and not be bothered.

> If you live in or near Cincinnati you may know who I am talking about.

Plenty of other clubs have at least 2 repeater pairs of their own. I'm not a CRA member, never have been (ask my cohorts about this), but I'm guessing you had a bad experience on one of their machines because you haven't talked about any other club's repeaters?

Also...have you been to an ARPSC meeting? How about a QCEN meeting? (You haven't been to a QCEN meeting). Can you name some of the leadership from each group? You'll find very little in common.

Have you checked into a WARN net? No. Will you attend the annual WARN meeting/training? After this, you'd better!

Ok Phil:

I'm guessing that what happened is you jumped on a CRA repeater, at drive time, and monopolized the thing. I don't know about your operating practices, but good or not, no one wants to hear YOUR opinions and ideas for hours at a time.

You seem to be like many other UseNet posters. You have a lot of complaints, but you don't tell the whole story. And since you've NEVER been at meetings of the organizations in question, I expect that you will cease trashing them until you've met the people you seem to despise, and they've had a chance to meet you.

SkyWARN, ARES/RACES, and Red Cross are always looking for new hams. Ham radio is much more than ragchewing on or complaining about 2 meters.

But I get the impression that you're in the hobby because you think it will provide you a soapbox to share some kind of "opinions and ideas".

If so, you've probably joined the wrong hobby. Or you've been influenced by amateur radio operators who are misinformed.

I challenge you to explore ALL the repeaters and ALL the groups around Cincinnati, and report back honestly.

Otherwise, I won't take the time to invite you to join the real hobby, and won't offer my time to help in any way I can (which is what I'm trying to do here).

Hiya all

My father (ZS2AW) is looking for the power plug pinouts for a TS430S he was given recently. He was not given the power plug/cable.
He has got it working in RX, but says there is some special connection to get TX working. Sadly, his sight is failing and he can no longer see to figure these fiddly things out for himself (he is 81 after all :-)

If anyone has the info, please post here, I will check back over the next few days. In fact if anyone has a PDF of the entire manual that would be welcome via email (the email address NoSpamdaf@iwr.ru.ac.za works as-is).

According to posts retained on Google, Woger has been plagiarizing for years. He stole posts back as far as 1997, and probably even earlier. Plagiarism was one of the main reasons that Woger got run out of the flame news groups. One post in particular is still retained on several web pages as a classic anti-Wiseman flame. I quote it here, leaving it as an exercise for the reader to locate:

"Wiseman, don't bother following this up. You are worse than the worthless cunt I thought you were 24 hours ago. You are a worthless cunt without a single shred of human decency, a pathetic little plagiarist caught out by one regular and TWO FUCKING NEWBIES who still tries to bluster his pathetic way out of a self-spun trap. If you are not so thoroughly ashamed of yourself that the contemplation of, at the very least, net suicide is going through your twisted little mind, then you are further gone than Gilbert T Sullivan. Fuck, Wiseman, even the HFW shun you, and that's saying something.

"I shit on you, Wiseman. I piss on your lowly worthless carcass. You are a twat, a no-good fuck, a worthless scumbag. You stink, you're lame, and you are the lowest of the low. You are a complete and utter waste of a good fuck. Someone in your family tree should have worn a condom, permanently, or at the very least on the rare occasions where they were attempting sexual congress within their species. As other posters have said, a good resource for licensing is www.arrl.org. Not to be an elitist or anything, but its probably in your best interest to get a license before taking a radio with you into the field. While it is my understanding that in a true life-or-death situation you have the right to use any communication means at your disposal, it is possible that you might have an unlicensed radio taken away after an incident. But besides, amateur radio is a fun hobby, and it will compete for funds with skiing! As a skier and ham myself I speak from experience. If you're looking for a source for equipment, Radio Shack is probably your easiest route. They sell a handheld for the 2 meter VHF band. Other than that a web search for ham dealers will return a slew of listings. I personally enjoy combining radio with the outdoors, whether its skiing or hiking. Good luck and feel free to email me if you have questions.

Steve,

I appreciate your comments and time. Very well put and I am not saying that all of the aforementioned groups are bad. In fact some of the work that is done by them is in the best of intentions. I do think, however, that you would have been wiser not to assume to know what my experiences out of life have been.

Broadcasting is not what I would like to do and I to not tend to get up on a soapbox about things (this time the thorn had dug too deep). In fact the conversation that I was talking about was less than a minuet long. The removal was an almost immediate response to someone talking on the repeater, and that is the reason that most of the repeater space is tied up and there is little place to talk. BTW I have looked around the spectrum and found a few good repeaters to talk on one in northern Kentucky and Indiana and one or two out in "fringe" counties of Southwestern Ohio.

Now as for WARN that you seem to think so highly ofi¿½I was listening to the last weather related WARN net during a heavy wind and rain storm that passed through a couple of weeks ago and do you know what I heard. I heard some guy talking about his trees and a garbage can in his back yard for about an hour. So let me see a rag chew about a tree during a weather net is acceptable but me saying hi to one of my friends on a quiet repeater on a sunny day in the after noon is scolded, that really gives me a lot of faith in this great hobby.

Steve, I know if your position with WARN, and I appreciate the work you do. You are right I have not been to any of the meetings or tanning, but I know, first hand, of people who have been very active and donated time equipment and money to your you cause and in return have faced ego and a poor attitude toward the work that was done. That is my reason for not jumping on the bandwagon and joining right up.

I am sorry for coming off very harsh in my first post, but I do like the hobby and I want to see it flourish. I do not want you to think me just a hateful individual, and I do understand that most hams are very nice and considerate people. I have traveled a bit and had some great experiences with hams in other areas. It just seams to me that this area, like with many other things, is just stuck in it's ways and refuses to accept change. And just possibly I have some miss information from other people that I have talked to about this so please tell me all the sides of the story I would love to hear them, and I promise I will listen to anyone with an intelligent point.

Now onto the "illegal" comment I made in my last post. I spoke to a very nice gentleman at the FCC and he told me that it was all right to have a "commercial" radio that would do amateur band just not the other way around. So if I miss stated my self I am sorry for that too.

I did but didn't find a new unbuilt SB102. I'd like to build one now because I was NASA certified in soldering in 1990 and it would be cool to build one and get on the wir with it. I'm KW0WW BTW.

If the receiver is working , the transmitter should be working. As far as I know, there is no "extra" power connections. The power connections are very standard on those rigs. They are the same as icom. In fact, the one for the 430 will fit my ic-706. "six pin". The pins are wired as such..If normal, on the radio the locking "tab" is on the left side while looking at the back of the radio. Of the six pins, the two middle pins are ground, tied together. The two top pins are positive, tied together. The other two pins are not used. I was just thinking...maybe they split off from the twin hot lines, but I'd always assumed they were just tied together to handle more current. That might explain why no xmit. But it's also possible the finals are gone, or a fuse is blown. MK

I built mine in 1969 and still use it. Original 6146's, too! That will change at this year's Dayton Hamvention, though, now that the XYL has given permission to buy a "state of the art" rig. I've never been

I just visited the site at www.members.shaw.ca/SWARL and found out all about SWL'ing the Ham Bands. As well, they offer a registry for SWL Call Signs and issue SWL Call Signs to those who do not have one already.

So, if you dont have a registered SWL call, visit their site. The call sign is free and the certificate is sent as a jpg file so you can print it out locally on your printer. They will also send out a hard copy of it if you wish.

Check them out.

That sounds sweet, but I haven't even been on the air since about 1995, yet alone HF.

Is it true, what I hear, that amateur radio has been dying out lately, due to cell phones of all things? You can't exactly have QSO's with people all over the world, using cell phones.

That is why your equipment has the ability to change frequencies or turn it off. If you are bored with the conversation then do one or the other.
No one should have to limit their conversation just to please you.

One should use some logic when there may be some emergency conditions.

Many of the early VHF FM units were simply converted commercial gear.
And it did the job quite nicely, but, of course, limited in channels till Certainly.

Where in my comments did I advocate that he had to limit his conversation?

The problem with UseNet is that people just don't read.

I think I'll resume ignoring UseNet ham radio groups and return to paying attention to ham radio itself!

Amateur Radio Newsline Report 1283 – March 15, 2002

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1283 with a release date of Friday, March 15th, 2002 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T.

Restructuring at the FCC should not impact on Amateur Radio and a first for the Dayton Hamvention. These stories are first on Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1283 coming your way right now.

REGULATORY ISSUES : FCC REORGANIZES LATER THIS MONTH

A reorganization of the Federal Communications Commission is set to become final later this month. This, as the agency stresses that realignment of responsibilities between various bureaus will make it more efficient and help it better respond to a changing technological marketplace. Amateur Radio Newsline's David Black, KB4KCH, takes a look at some of the changes.

It's an independent government agency that reports directly to Congress. It's mission is to regulate communications. One of the services it oversees is Amateur Radio, but most observers of the reorganization of the Federal Communications Commission see little impact on hobby communications.

As part of the reorganization a new Media Bureau will combine the duties of the current Cable and Mass Media bureaus. The goal of the combined bureau? To treat competitors of multiple entertainment delivery systems equally and consistently. This includes broadcasters, cable operators and satellite service providers to name only a few.

Other changes include a renamed Consumer and Governmental Affairs Bureau. Also, a realigned International Bureau still will handle satellite licensing but most policy issues will now be the domain of the newly created Media Bureau.

These are just a few of many changes taking place. Most appear aimed at commercial interests. For ham radio, C-B, G-M-R-S and most two-way radio users the shift will probably be transparent. In other words, for these spectrum users and most others, it looks like business as usual within a soon to be restructured FCC.

From the South-East Bureau in Birmingham Alabama, I'm David Black, KB4KCH, reporting for the Amateur Radio Newsline. Don.

Congress endorsed the plan late last year. The FCC then approved the overhaul in January. The changes will take effect March 25th. You can read more on the web at www.fcc.gov. (ARNewsline (tm) from published news reports)

RADIO LAW: FCC REFUSES TO SIDE WITH CB'ER IN LOCAL CITATION CASE

The FCC has refused to hear an appeal by an Illinois C-B operator who was convicted of Disorderly Conduct for using an 11 meter Class D Citizens Band Radio. Amateur Radio Newsline's Norm Seeley, KI7UP, has the details:

Gary D. White is among the first C-B operators dinged under a new authority granted by the Federal Government to states and municipal law enforcement agencies. Authority to control interference caused by operators of Class D 11 Meter C-B radio sets.

White was convicted on a state Disorderly Conduct charge of operating his C-B equipment in an unreasonably loud, offensive, harassing or threatening manner. He was not convicted of violating any FCC rules. White believed that the citation was based on interference to a neighbors telephone and television receiver. This in itself is not a violation of FCC Part 95 rules. And because of this he also believed that local authorities had no justification to sanction him. So he appealed the conviction to the FCC.

But the FCC says that the proof of guilt on the Disorderly conduct allegation is not in its preview to consider. This is because no FCC rules were violated. Also, under a law enacted by Congress in November of 2000, state and local governments are free to enact laws to enforce existing Part 95 Citizens Radio Service rules.

Bottom line. The FCC will not interfere in the case and White will have to find other avenues if he wishes to continue his appeals.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Norm Seeley, KI7UP.

Congress enacted the law to give state and local authorities enforcement authority over 11 meter C-B operators due to the rising tide of unnecessary and harmful interference to other people using radio devices in near-by spectrum. This includes corded and wireless telephones, television receivers, stereo Hi-Fi sets and other consumer electronic gear. Ham radio is specifically exempted from the law and any ordinance it may be used to create. (W5YI Report)

HAM RADIO RIGHTS: NM. AND W.VA. JOIN THE PRB-1 BANDWAGON

The ARRL Letter reports that New Mexico and West Virginia have become the 14th and 15th states to adopt pro Amateur Radio antenna bills based on the limited federal preemption known as PRB-1. Amateur Radio Newsline’s Jeff Clark, K8JAC, reports:

We have this report:

In New Mexico Governor Gary Johnson signed House Bill 314 on March 5th. This, after it easily passed both houses of the legislature last month with just two opposing votes during a short session that typically only deals with appropriations bills. Called New Mexico's "Emergency Communication Preservation Act" the measure was sponsored by State Representative Mimi Stewart and Senator Ramsay Gorham. It stipulates that municipal or county ordinances regulating Amateur Radio antennas cannot obstruct or preclude amateur radio service communications. Also, that such ordinances shall reasonably accommodate amateur radio service communications.

Here in West Virginia Governor Bob Wise signed House Bill 4335 into law on March 7th. The bill provides that antenna structures may be erected at heights and dimensions sufficient to accommodate amateur radio service communications but does not include a minimum regulatory height schedule. The measure also exempts Amateur Radio antenna towers constructed prior to the effective date from subsequent zoning regulation changes.

From Charleston West Virginia, I’m Jeff Clark, K8JAC.

In signing the West Virginia bill into law, Governor Wise, whose late father held the call sign W-A-8-A-Y-P, also proclaimed March 7 as Amateur Radio Operators Appreciation Day across the state. (ARRL)

AMERICA AT WAR: NEW TERRORISM ALERT SYSTEM

The United States has a new color-coded terrorism warning system. It was revealed on Tuesday, March 12th by Homeland Security chief Tom Ridge.

The five-level system is a response to public complaints that broad terror alerts issued by the government since the Sept. 11 attacks raised alarm without providing useful guidance. The lowest-status warning is green, followed by blue, yellow, orange and red as the perceived dangers intensify.

As the terrorism warning system was unveiled, Ridge said that the nation is on yellow alert. This means that the United States is facing a significant risk of danger but not the highest stage.

The alert system is in force immediately for federal agencies, and Ridge is urging state and local governments to adopt it, too. It will be subject to a 45-day comment period, after which it probably will be revised. It's not known what part if any Amateur Radio will play in the new enhanced terrorism alert scheme. ENFORCEMENT: TAKE THAT UNCOORDINATED REPEATER OFF THE AIR

The FCC has told the operator of an uncoordinated North Carolina repeater to stop interfering with a coordinated machine, even if it means immediately taking his system off the air. This is the edict handed down to the operators of the NY4X repeater by FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth, K4ZDH.

Hollingsworth: " We also notified Richard Howell, NY4X, of Greer South Carolina and John Parker, AG4AZ, of Brevard Norrth Carolina that upon reciept of the letter, the NY4X repeater that they operate had to either shut down, obtain coordination or submit a detailed plan to the Commission to prevent interference to the KU4OL [repeater]."

"Now this interference has been going on for quite some time. We notified Parker and Howell back in November that something had to be done. Nothing was accomplished in regard to coordination and nothing was done in regard to the interference."

Hollingsworth letter says that Howell and Parker had more than ample time to fulfill their obligation under Section 97.205 of the Commission's rules. And late word is that the repeater has been shut down. (FCC, RAIN)

ENFORCEMENT: TAKE THAT BROKEN REPEATER OFF THE AIR

The NY4X repeater is not the only machine currently under FCC scrutiny. Another one is in Northern California. This one is having technical problems and is causing interference to machines on adjacent channel pairs. Again, the FCC's Riley Hollingsworth, K4ZDH:

Hollingsworth: "We notified Wendall Peterson of Walnut Creek California, operator of the K6POU repeater that more than enough time has elapsed for him to correct the technical and control problems with the repeater. His earlier response to our inquiry showed that the bandwidth was indeed so wide that it caused problems to two other repeaters. We have gotten complaints about that. And the repeater system is just not operating in accordance with good Amateur practice."

Hollingsworth says that his office expects the problems with the repeater to be corrected or that the machine will be taken off the air. He also gave Peterson 20 days from the date of his letter to respond. (FCC, RAIN)

ENFORCEMENT: THE RESPONSIBILITY OF REPEATER OWNERS

The FCC enforcement involving the NY4X and K-6POU repeaters are just the latest in a series of actions aimed at cleaning up the problems that have been plaguing the F-M community. Whether it's an uncoordinated repeater causing havoc to a coordinated machine, or a long established system in need of maintenance, the FCC's Hollingsworth says responsibility comes with repeater ownership:

Hollingsworth: "We want to emphasize that repeaters are voluntary. Nobody has to put one up. But if you do put one up you have a responsibility to maintain it, to get coordination if that's necessary, and to operate in accordance with good Amateur practices, especially if other repeaters are being detrimentally affected."

In reality, the only things the FCC is asking of those who own and operate repeaters is to be good neighbors and to adhere to the proper technical standards. In this way, the repeaters themselves can better serve their service area and the ham radio community in it. (FCC, RAIN)

RESCUE RADIO: KNOWING WHERE YOU ARE IN THE MID WEST

If you drive the highways and by-ways of Kentucky, you need never worry again about where you are. And if you get in a bind, rescuers will be able to find you. That is, if you are a ham radio operator equipped with a mobile APRS station. Jack Parker, W8ISH, of Amateur News Weekly, says that in his part of the world it is a mode that is truly coming of age:

Good news from the Kentuckey Automatic Position Reporting Society" their network of APRS digipeters is growing like well bred Kentucky Race Horses.

According to Brian Walker, KC4FIE, several new sites will be coming on line very soon. New digi's are planned for Grand Rivers, Morgantown, Owensboro, Lawrenceburg, and Dry Ridge to name a few.

The Murry State University club has added a digipeter and two stations along the Kentuckey – Tennessee border have extended APRS coverage into that state. These efforts effective extend the Mid-West network of APRS digipeters established by the Tri-State Working Group in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois.

If you need more information on the Automatic Position Reporting System just check the APRS Working Group website at www.tawg.org.

Reporting for Amateur News Weekly, this is Jack Parker, W8ISH.

With interest in A-P-R-S growing and ham gear that includes the mode as a standard feature, look for a defacto nationwide network to be in place by the end of the decade. (ANW)

NAMES IN THE NEWS: HELPING HAND NET

We want to take a moment to welcome a new and very interesting net to the Amateur Radio Newsline family. It is on the AD6XK repeater here in Los Angeles California on 145.440 MHz.

What makes this net very special is that its Control Operator Simon Rosconi, K6DXN, is visually impaired. According to Dave Estrada, KD6HDX, Rosconi lost his vision at age 6. Estrada says that even without sight, Rosconi works 40 hours a week, and still finds time to volunteer his time as control operator for the nets.

But Rosconi is not the only vision impaired ham involved. Estrada tells Amateur Radio Newsline that Brian Coponiti, KG6BVO, who is also partially blind, has also volunteered. Coponiti downloads and plays back Amateur Radio Newsline to the net.

Estrada adds that this particular repeater group also has two other operators that are visually impaired. They are Gary La Duke, WB6WJW and Ivan Simer, K6TTA. (KD6HDX)

NAMES IN THE NEWS: EDWARD T. CLEGG, W8LOY FAMILY CELEBRATION

A few weeks ago we told you about plans by the family of the late Edward T. Clegg, W8LOY, to celebrate the life of this ham radio pioneer. The gathering is being planned by Ed’s widow Martie, her daughter Linda and Linda’s husband Rob Mc Guffie, K2HZN. Recently, RAIN producer Hap Holly, KC9RP, had a chance to speak with Rob about the upcoming event:

--
NO TEXT AVAILABLE – AUDIO ONLY

Hap conducted an extensive interview with Rob Mc Guffie. It really tells the whole story of Ed Clegg and his famed Clegg Labs. Part 1 is online right now at www.rainreport.com or by telephone at 847-827-7246. (RAIN)

RADIO REGULATIONS: AVOIDING A PHONE NUMBER CRUNCH

The nation's supply of telephone phone numbers is depleting rapidly and the government is taking steps to make sure what is left lasts longer. Amateur Radio Newsline’s Henry Feinberg, K2SSQ, has more:

--
Over the past several years, area codes have multiplied to cope with the explosion in technology. Regions have responded by splitting up area codes among geographic areas or laying another area code over an existing one.

But in 1996 the Federal Communications Commission banned such overlays dedicated to specific kinds of technology. The Commission enacted the ban because it considered separate area codes for cellular telephones phones and pagers unfair to wireless companies and their customers. This is because everyone would have to dial 10 digits instead of seven to reach wireless customers.

But states including California, Massachusetts and Ohio had been been asking for ways to prevent existing area codes from running out of phone numbers, the agency said. The FCC says that it will now hear proposals from states on how they intend to conserve area codes on a case-by-case basis, including plans to use technology-specific area codes.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm Henry Feinberg, K2SSQ, in West Orange New Jersey.

The FCC, which is responsible for overseeing the supply of phone numbers, says that without action the number pool will run out in less than ten years. (FCC)

HAM RADIO BUSINESS: A NEW HOME FOR VERTEX STANDARD/YAESU

The new address is Vertex Standard U-S-A, 10900 Walker Street, Cypress, California, 90630. The new main phone number is area code 714-827-7600. All e-mail addresses will remain the same but telephone extensions will change. Vertex Standard makes the move -- no joke -- on Monday, April 1st. (Vertex-Standard)

THAT FINAL ITEM: A WEDDING AT HAMVENTION 2002

And finally this week, get ready for a first. The first ever wedding to be held at the Dayton Hamvention.

No, we are not kidding. For the first time in Hamvention history, wedding vows will be exchanged at the show. This as Cyndi Krieger and Mark Elliot, N8WZW, will be married Saturday, May 18th at the HARA Arena during Hamvention 2002.

Mark and Cyndi met about thirteen years ago through a mutual friend. On their first date Mark and Cyndi went out for dinner and a movie. According to Hamvention sources, they have been an "item" ever since.

Mark introduced Cyndi to amateur radio by going to a hamfest. Cyndi had no idea what a hamfest was, but it sounded interesting. It was and she was hooked! Cyndi is now studying for her license and may test for it before Hamvention weekend.

Why get married at Hamvention? Mark and Cyndi couldn't think of a better place to share their love for each other and for amateur radio than by getting married at the world's largest amateur radio trade show. The ceremony takes place at 3 PM in Forum Room 3 immediately following the Amateur Radio Newsline produced Ham Radio Town Meeting. (Hamvention (r))

There appears to be a self conflict in the headers, as well as incorrect formatting in the body of the post. As a result, it is difficult for many news clients to read.

If the character set is really Unicode Transfer Format (utf-8), it is not an 8 bit format, but rather a 7 bit format within which ascii is unchanged. Therefere, the "Content-Transfer-Encoding: 8bit" header violates the UTF-8 standard.

Frequently, the text does contain 8 bit characters (octal 342, 200 and 231) which are not a part of the US ascii character set and which are therefore rendered arbitrarily by the reader's browser. Legibility suffers.

While we all enjoy and appreciate the ARNewsline report, at least some readers wish that the poster would go to some efforts to fix these ongoing formatting problems up. If they are AOL's problems, there is no surprise there. Perhaps a different news client / ISP combination is in order.

Doug T.

Try going to http://qrp.lehigh.edu/lists/qrp-l/, subscribe to the reflector for just a few days, then ask that question.

Or like Ken said, go to Dayton, then ask that question.

The numbers are down, no doubt. But dying out is a little strong. I would say there certainly seems to be more interest in homebrewing than 10 years ago. Could be just that the Internet brings more homebrewers/kit builders together. Certainly it makes parts easier to get and gives kit suppliers easier access to their market.

BTW, as nice as an SB-102 is, newer kits can run circles around it at a fraction of the price. Nowadays, when you buy a Heathkit you are buying an antique, and paying antique collector prices for it. If you could find a NIB 102, I'll bet it will fetch a couple of grand. Seems like a few months back an unbuilt HW-7 fetched about $800 ... this is a radio worth less than $50 built.

If you really want to melt solder, take a peek at the stuff from Elecraft, NorCal, Small Wonder Labs, OHR, Red Hot Radio, etc. etc. etc. Then look at Homebrew stuff from K8IQY, NJQRP, Harry's Homebrew Homepage, EI9GQ, etc. etc. In fact, if you go to QRP ARCI's links page, they must have a list of 50 kit suppliers. You won't get the nice feeling of building an old Heathkit (if you can stand to put it together after seeing the price), but you will get a nicer rig for a bunch less money.

Being a certified solderer was never a prerequisite for putting together a Heathkit. The 1 or 2 pages on "How To Solder", in all of the Heath manuals, was usually enough for anyone to put one together and get them running. Although my first kit, at the tender age of 10, was a Knight Kit Star Roamer I have built, used, and still use many Heathkits. They made good units and are easy to fix, but that may be because I grew up with them and have had 40 years to understand them. I have a SB-101 on my workbench right now with a keying delay problem. I know what the problem is, I'm just waiting on the replacement tube.

IMHO, buying a unbuilt Heathkit for the purposes of building it would be a huge waste of money. You would pay several thousand dollars for a unbuilt SB-102 and, the second you put a soldering iron to the first wire the worth would drop to less than 5% of what you paid. Putting together one of the newer kits, as opposed to a Heathkit, is no less satisfying and you don't run into the huge investment loss.

An advantage of a newer kit is that it is going to be designed with a newer technology. Something that may be easier to understand than taking a trip in the "wayback" machine and learning about tubes. And the newer kit will work as good, if not better, than a Heathkit. The money you save can then be spent on other goodies, like a nice shiny new CW key. :)

My Heathkits include, but are not limited to: Twoer, Sixer, DX-40, SB-10, HO-10, HR-1680, HX-1681, HM-102, HM-2102, ...
I love then all and still use them all, but I would like a kit made by someone else just as much.

I agree. There is an extreme rightwing element in HAM radio, and alot of these extremeist own repeater equipment, etc.... Also, they exist on every band. There are some of those types here in this area where I live. The best way to handle it is to get your own group of locals together, and use another repeater, or better yet there is always simplex. When people/clubs setup a repeater or repeater system, it acts as a status symbol. You know "We are cool cause we got our own repeater" type thing. I say let them keep their coolness and steer clear. If you just have to communicate on that frequency, just go Simplex on the output. That way you are not using their equipment, and you are not causing interference either.

Too many people out there who want to make contact with you to have to deal with afew snobby knuckle-heads.

As far as death to the hobby, that is in the hands of marketing. All you have to do is make it the cool thing and people will get in it again. Come out with some Tom Cruize movie about "Modern Radio" I will bet every kid will be in a Tech class.(Just like Kung Fu, Golf, computer hacking, saggy painters pants, and Tony Bennett). Who would have ever thought that it would be cool to walkaround in sagging pants? If marketing can do that, it can be done with radio also. Problem is, some of them old foggies and elitists out there dont want a lot of people in the hobby. Not enough money in it for it to make the investment to market it. So here we sit.

When using SOMEONE ELSES repeater, you should use COMMON COURTESY to share the stage, so to speak and not get into confrontational conversations. If you want to utilize your soapbox, go to a simplex frequency and have at it! Repeaters are for sharing, not preaching.

Ok, then can I actually build a full featured all band HF transceiver that will stand up against the Asian assembled ones they sell retail?

One of Heathkit's original failings was that, for the same money, you couldn't build a rig with anything near the features of a commercially made ones.

BTW, it sounds interesting, but I'm not really into QRP. Is anyone making a full featured all band HF transceiver kit that puts out full power? (like 100-200 watts PEP out?)

I just got this Yaesu 101 with the YC-601 frequency counter. The thing lights up and receives real well but the guy I got it from says the tubes need to be replaced so I haven't transmitted on it.
I pulled the tubes out and the two final tubes (Labelled 6JS6A Toshiba) have what looks like some glass rattling around inside them. The driver tube (Labelled 12BY7A) seems fine.
Question is where can I get these tubes?
After replacing them what will be the output wattage of this unit?
Thanks in advance....

Does anyone have a schematic for this 2m FM rig. Alinco was no help, emailed them a year ago and nothing.

All of a sudden this one gets very insensitive on receive. It's intermittant, appears to be maybe a thermal problem, not mechanical. Receiver goes from full scale receive of a local station or repeater signal to no bars and barely above the noise floor. Example a local 3 miles away hits full scale on 3 watts, when the recieve drops out he has to crank it up to 100 watts before I can hear him and then it's only 2 bars.

It's not antenna related, different feed lines, different antennas, SWR bridge in line at all times no change at all in output signal. Problem is somewhere in the front end. Any ideas?

You can always go to the swap meet and pick one up and RE-build It...
That's how I got mine in '76. Most of the parts are easily replaced by generics and through original manufacturers. The dial parts and the drive belts are the biggest problem. I suspect the drive belts could be found in vacuum cleaner shops or from PRB (tape/vcr/projector

One of life's undeniable truths is that people like Wiseman who psycho-babble at length about how many "degrees" they have and how many "fire fights" they were in during their military "combat" tours is that they are fakes and frauds. They are "war heroes" only in their own troubled brains. They possess "college degrees" only in their own wild imaginations.

Simple fact of life is that real combat tested veterans rarely, if ever, talk about their war experiences. And those who hold real university degrees don't babble at length about their educational accomplishments. Their stature in life is readily apparent to those who know them.

Almost always, without exception, people of Wiseman's ilk in truth, hold low-end retail jobs and other service jobs, simple boring jobs which pay minimum wage. That is, if they even hold jobs. Often their spouses support them or we do with our taxes. As far as "combat experiences," if people of Wiseman's ilk even served in the military, it was in some boring peace time job in a clerical field at some stateside base. You will often find people of his ilk were "kicked" out of the military for various reasons which rendered them unfit for military service.

So Wogey, spin your stories any way you want. As someone once said, they're your stories, so spin away! distort the truth anyway you want, but we know the real truth. The Elecraft K2 in base configuration is a QRP rig. Well, close to it.
Mine puts out almost 15W on some bands, although I never use it over 10W. It can be built to 'fine tune' it to closer to 5W max if you're really serious about QRP. If you build it that way, it's slightly more frugal with the battery than it is if you 'turn it down' to 5W.

But if you're not into QRP, there is an optional kit to make it a QRO rig.
At one time they were talking about a 50W or a 100W option.

I know they've tested it, but I don't recall if it's offered for sale yet.
Obviously not a battery power rig anymore. In fact, you have to give up the 'top panel' options for it. That means no internal battery and no ATU.
But the ATU is for 20W max anyway.

Now, who knows if the optional QRO will ever finally make it out, but the rig is a nice piece of work even as is. And if you want to build QRO, build an amp for it. There's already kits (or at least, parts list as 'pseudokits' what with the FCC rules to prevent abuse on 11M) for amps on the market for the K2 and 817 that are attuned to the fact it's a QRP rig.

I thought about an outboard amp at home for mine, but it just seems I'm not having too much trouble with just 10W.

It's valid allright..
I just got the verification e-mail (after more than 4 hours). Mail to Verification mail from yahoogroups to qsl.net works (slowly) but mailinglist postings don't... they do work to other addresses...

I suspect yahoogroups since it started since they moved the servers.

OK, the K2 I believe is now available with the 100W option.

As far as I can tell, none of the kits have all the features of the rice boxes, depending on what features you care about. The K2 trades off some of the frills of the mid range commercial rigs to get top of the line receiver performance. There are a number of K2 features not found in the commercial rigs, but they tend to be features of interest to QRPers. A fully decked-out K2 is comparable in price to a mid-range commercial rig. The receiver specs are more comparable to a Japanese rig three times the price.

(oh yeah, the obvious URL http://www.elecraft.com, also see the reviews at the Adventure Radio Society site and QST. ARS has some nice comparative data).

I happen to have a K1, which is a much more limited rig than the K2 (and a much more limited price!) What struck me is the ergonomics. The rig is much better laid out than my Icom. In spite of being a low-end rig, the thing is a joy to use.

It's a little hard to get objective feedback on the K2. People who have them are absolutely rabid about the things. I would suggest finding someone who has one and playing with it a bit. In my opinion, it's a nice rig, and I have played with a couple. But you're not going to learn anything from talking to someone who has one ... they are all blinded by the Elecraft mojo.

Well, I take that back. People on the Elecraft reflector are talking like they have the 100W option, but I see no trace of it on the web site. (Since I'm not a QROer, I have to admit blowing by all those notes about the amp anyway).

k5oor's first build of his HF Packer amp is closed, next build likely not until the end of the year (http://www.hfprojects.com)

Also, I would suggest downloading the construction manual. Heathkit never made a manual as good as Elecraft's.

The funny thing about Wiseman is that the other day when I went to the VA hospital I tried to look him up in the VA computer's "friend finder" service they provide (a neat little dealt hey provide so you can find your old service buddies). There was no record of Wiseman. This speaks of either a dishonorable discharge or no actual service at all. Either way he is a lying cocksucker....like that is a surprise.

Anonymity , you fucking typo lamer, is what you do because you're too chickenshit to let me know who you are. Why is that? If you're so big and bad as you run your syphlitic mouth, you wouldn't lie awake nights wondering how to hide from me.

You sound a little jealous that you couldn't havk the easiest year in

Hey, you are a fucking IDIOT. Oh, and Riley KNOWS about how you're QRMing on a daily basis on 14.313. So I cut out a few groups, the ones you included because you're getting your ass kicked by me in here on a regular basis. Quit whining, cunt.

"Me thinks," you slobbering COWARD? What a pompus asshole, you are. You and "thinking" have an adversarial relationship, you perverted kiddie fucker. I did you a favor by flushing your shit away, because it is filled with spelling and punctuation mistakes. I can always tell when I've gotten the best of you, you type almost in a Pavlovian response, neither knowing or apparently caring how many mistakes you gibber out. And what would a CONVICT like you be doing at the VA hospital. I guess, I'll

Here is the answer to your question. It sounded to me as it seems it did to others that if you are tired of the conversation that it should end.

>The problem with UseNet is that people just don't read.

Here, my fellow hams, is exactly the problem I am talking about. If you happen to have something to say that is not to there likening they just ignore you both here, in type, and on the radio in hopes that you will just go away.

Here is a little something I found on a web page don't ask me what page because it was like 3am and I had one foot in the bed when I e-mail it to my self. Someone else that has my opinion and seems like he knows the area very well.

To the author of this I hope that you do not mind me using your words for my point and if you do see this here please e-mail me I would love to talk to you a little more in depth.

"Ham radio can be an exciting hobby. Being able to join different groups that are involved in emergency communications and Red Cross activities, and a chance to meet new people. What happened in Cincinnati? The local Tri-State area has quite a different twist on ham radio. First off, the 2M band is filled with mostly jammers, lids and other clueless people. The 1.25M band is basically empty. The 70Cm band is filled with mostly clueless "EMERGENCY SERVICE" operators that down grade the hobby more than support it. This town has many open repeaters on the air but a few short conversations will tell you that they are mostly ego driven, self centered operators who only care about sounding and looking good for whomever they are trying to impress. I have monitored many so called EMERGENCY SERVICE nets, including the local "SKYWARN" group only to hear fancy attitudes, over structured management and "window dressing" like no other town or city

I have ever seen or heard. These operators, in the name of "AMATEUR RADIO SERVICE" have no regard for public service that I or others have observed but rather use their position for press exposure and ego stroking. The NWS in the local area seems to be just about as clueless with the issuance of timely watch and /or warning statements. How sad that all the time, money and equipment in the Tri-State Area is WASTED for a bunch of self serving groups who's only goal seems to be frequency spectrum domination and fame. My heart goes out to all those who live in this area and I can only hope that one day, perhaps, regular communications with regular operators can once again be monitored in the Amateur Radio Service. Until that time I guess the Cincinnati Area will remain a "RADIO WASTELAND"."

I'm personally just interested in a nice stable multimode rig (except maybe CW which I think is obsolete anyway and should no longer be required for licensing) with a digital readout and perhaps a spectrum display, that will cover all bands. SWL bands would be nice too, and if I could afford one, it would also have complete receiver coverage from 100Hz to maybe 1 or 2 GHz. I may need a rice box for all that, I don't know. But if I start wishing and fantasizing, there it goes, from an SB102 to all that. :)

Roger is rather fantasy-prone in that he perceives himself to be of above average intellect. To date he has had absolutely no success in convincing others of this. His spelling is, as we all know, atrocious and his plagiarism is legend.
Roger's current project is finding a thesis to plagiarize for his alleged

No need to add to what has been said.

I've got it here crystal clear and loud and he identified the station as Voice of the Knight (or maybe it was Night?) Said he was Radio Bob and for a QSL to write to POB 1551 Cornelia, GA 30531. Then he gave a phone number and said he lived in the basement of his mother Colleens house with with a gay boyfriend and Patricia Mary and they'd be on the Jerry Springer Show soon as he's breaking up with Patricia Mary and running off to Clayton with the boyfriend Raoul who he says has "softer hands". Said to call 706-778-8606 and ask for Woody and he'd give you a tips on threesomes and ham radio that you could play on your station like he did. Did "who wants to be a pirate radio operator" like the Regis Philbin show, said he was the great RBCN who had been a pirate since 1992 and everyone else could just go f themselves. Guy was hilarious and rambled on about Santa Monica Drive in Decatur and being the King of CB'ers in Decatur but they drove him out of town and something about a second nervous breakdown that Pirate Radio is freaking him out so he's going back to being a Ham and he hates his neighbors on Red Fox Hollow Road and that he was Caligastia, the Prince of the Earth and friend of Lucifer so you better not F with him. Sounded like a true confession or a soap opera, but it was very entertaining to say the least. I haven't heard such a stream of bizarre stories and connections since the Crooked Man was on last year.

6925usb, SIO544, 2100-2135 then on again 2304-2341, excellent audio for a sideband signal very clear and crisp. Haven't heard anything that good since KIPM. SYCKO was on 6955 during some of this so I was tuning back and forth, but it was a super night for some funny pirate radio stuff. I tried to call the phone number given but it was busy everytime I called.

Phil, overwhelmingly, when a ham is sitting at an HF radio, he will talk to the strangest of strangers. Whe he is sitting at a VHF radio, he wants only to talk to his closest ham friends. Extremely cliquish.

Go to meetings and meet the people. Then they may be more apt to talk to you on their repeaters (be sure to join and pay their ransom). Or go to simplex. You might have better luck there. A 160W amp in the trunk doesn't hurt.

Whatever you do, don't try to put up another %$&*@ vhf repeater. You won't get anyone to talk to you there either.

Drunkard Dimmy will be telling war stories on 75M tonight. Tune in as he regales you with his (fictitious) tales of combat and personal bravery while under hostile fire. Laugh as he regales the listeners with his heroic deeds of single-handedly holding off a superior force using only an M-79 grenade launcher! Feel the adrenaline rush as he tells of parachuting from helicopters while firing an M-16 during the descent. Listen to him tell of his covert night missions and crawling through the oozing mud and weeds as he makes his drunken way from Mike's Package Store to his little red rented hovel. Yes...all this and more awaits you listeners when The Adventures of a Navy Seal are once again aired!

I have just acquired a Heathkit HW-8 and seek some advice on it's repair. If this isn't the proper place, would someone be kind enough to point me in the right direction?

Anyway, it receives fine, has working sidetone, I hear the T/R relay switching when the key is depressed (although what the key has to be depressed about is beyond me...), but alas, there is no RF output in any of the bands.

I had read that toriod coils were notorious for failing in these units, but that it generally only affected the 40 and 80 meter bands. I assume that having no output on any of the bands indicates a different type of problem.

I have checked all of the voltages listed in the Heathkit Manual and they all check fine. I don't see any obviously bad components, ie burnt resistors, etc. I notice that Heathkit did not see fit to include a schematic in the manual (although I have not possession of the infamous second manual containing graphics, only the main construction manual).

Any thoughts or gentle nudging in the right direction would be appreciated.

Your recent actions prove that you have not yet sunk to the bottom of the septic tank, but you are getting close. Your sleezy and cowardly acts prove beyond any doubt that you are to be pitied. Yes...you are to be pitied. You and your spouse are indeed pathetic and the both of you are psychotic.

If you know of, or know the identity of, an individual claiming to be a Navy SEAL, go to this web page:

Use the link on that page to send an e-mail identifying the individual and his life will change. They will check him out, post his name as a phony and let him know that they are on to him. If he persists, he may get a visit from real SEALs.

The real SEALs take a dim view of phonies and wannabees.

Check out the Morse code section of:
http://www.ac6v.com/

You will find freeware or shareware you can download and install that will teach you the code and provide all the code practice you can use.

Better than tapes because these programs allow you to control the speed, spacing, etc. -- and you can't memorize the code as you can on a tape.

Special troops in their own minds,
But underneath not what one finds,
Not real men, but just phonies,
Nothin' but trash, them Wannabees.

Mike Force, Recon, and A-Teams, Heroes all, but in their dreams.
Many claims we all shall see,
None more clear than the Wannabee.

Forced to live off others's toil,
Their false claims make your blood boil.
They wouldn't start if just they knew,
But Wannabees aint got no clue.

Ranger tabs and all that stuff,
Talk real big, and think they're tough,
Scum who brag so all can see,
Ain't no man, just a Wannabee.

In his mind he must just wait,
'Til shown up to meet his fate.
Once exposed he always finds,
The real thing treats him unkind.

So put all that stuff on your chest,
Make believe you are the best.
Once found out, this too will pass,
Wannabee, we'll kick your ass. "

Greetings, everyone. I have an old ICOM IC-3AT (same enclosure as the 2AT) that has a very weak internal speaker that I need to replace. The speaker is held in place by both glue and melted plastic. Has anyone replaced one of these? Did you extract the speaker with a razor blade knife or by some other means? Thanks for any comment, Sincerely and 73s,

Some of us in the Ozark boondocks are looking into how to setup a long distance wireless high speed network that we can access the net with.

I already have a 2w fm transmitter card I bought for 25$ and I see where there are 50watt transmitters for 150$.
but how do we go from the digital pc output to analog for the transmitter?

NIC?
VGA NTSC I/O? stereo sound card?

If you are truly using digital audio, then using the digital output would seem to need to be inputted into a mixer capable of accepting a digital signal. Once accomplished... then you feed the analog line-out from the mixer into usually a compression/limiter before sending a "controlled signal" to any Xmitter's exciter Encoders.

On the other hand if you are simply talking about have music or webcast links from other stations feed out of your computer... then it's just as easy to tap off the outputs of a Stereo Sound card and take it from there. This I mean... do you want to add compression and limiters? or just stream music off the PC onto "the air"?

I use a program called OtsJuke which allows me to insert jingles, promos, psa's, weather, and very flexible playlists. Plus it also allows me a "live mic" feature or line-in if I wish to add any outside hardware sound source to the stream. OtsJuke has it's own built in compressor and limiter if one wishes it. Totally designed to prevent over modulation if one wants to use the program for legal or otherwise broadcasting.

I only use mine for Webcasting and mobile Dj party type gigs. My location is too congested to even think of a Xmitter in my area.

There are many programs out there for Dj work... Only one needs his/her imagination to decide how far to integrate it into webcasting, live performance, or on-air Xmitting. Winamp alone... and play out via a sound card web links or any audio format that Winamp supports... Best part... the program is FREE.

Hope this has helped a bit..

Ps... A great resource for how do they do it, can be simply discussed with "live" webcasters who stream of the various sites. I have even gotten top dance playlists from asking those q/a's from live Dj's on the web. Helped me keep current of the new tunes....

Yes Winamp is great for automated broadcasting - recorded intors, music mp3's etc..... just drag and drop files into the playlist windows!!! simple and works fine.

As for digital ....maybe a "bluetooth wireless LAN" (or whatever formats are now out) so computers within a few hundred feet can tapin and playback mp3 music over the LAN. (PC's would have to have the need LAN reciever cards and and would be in effect be your "radio reciever"

Bluetooth uses a protocol that specifically limits its range so that neighbors don't interfere with one another.

Well, it's a nice collection of reasonably exotic QSL cards. But he could have done a better job of scanning them. Lots of aliasing from the beat of halftone printed cards and scanner resolution. What he needs to do is first set the scanner to a higher resolution, 2nd do a 2 dimensional low pass filter, and 3rd shrink the images to a size appropriate for the amount of resolution the cards had originally.

The alias products in the images is eating up internet bandwidth and is a reason for it being slow to load.

GE Model T125A Radio. Pink plastic case, c. 1951 according to my dad. Five tubes. AM band only, but it works! Some hum...
Caveat: a few grease splatters because it was in a kitchen. If you're skilled you can likely disassemble the thing and soak the plastic case.

Not a HAM radio but many of you folks like taking apart old radios, especially those with tubes. Perhaps some useful replacement parts??? I'm not a HAM but do scanner listening daily.

3426. MURS service beginning to grow

After a tentative beginning, overshadowed by Motorola's initial attempts to ban the service, and later attempts to water down the external antenna and data/telemetry permissions, the MURS service has gained a foothold, and is starting to see significant growth, with a number of manufacturers beginning to offer MURS-specific solutions.

MURS (Multi-Use Radio Service) is a fairly new no-license VHF personal radio service which operates on 151.820, 151.880, 151.940, 154.570, and 154.600 MHz with a maximum ERP (Effective Radiated Power) of 2 watts. The FCC MURS rules permit voice, data, and image communication; as well as external antennas. Unlike the Amateur Service, there are no restrictions on business activities with MURS, and the 2W ERP limit works as a major benefit for building a nationwide Internet-backboned public-access wireless network. Any low-power VHF business radio capable of meeting the newer FCC-mandated 7.5Khz channel spacing and 11.25Khz bandwidth limitations(most manufacturers refer to this as 12.5Khz channel spacing), can be used on the MURS frequencies; this includes most handheld business radios built after 1995, as well as some mobile radios, such as the Radio Shack 19-1210.

For discussions and more information on MURS, see:

Raymond,

I have replaced the 3 volt lithuim Coin batteries with a coin battery holder
after removing the old battery which was a soldered battery with pins.

I ran a + & - wire and taped the coin holder in the spare space right above the speaker, once insulated, no problem.

Be careful on opening the the back case and you will see the battery. It is a common type of battery and the coin holder is available at Radio Shack.

It really isn't too hard to replace the battery, I only got 4 yrs out of mine. It is self explanitory when you open the case but use caution.

Any questions, feel free to call

Hello,
It is the timr when the backup batteries on each of my familys HTX-XXX radios are becoming tired.
Extended warranty has lrun out on the last one, so I am in a bit of a problem. Assumingly, both the VHF & UHF are essentially the same inside, the proceedure for the replacement of the backup battery should be identical.

My problem, is there anyone with a service manual willing to scan the proper pages for me and send them to me a a file so I won't be going in there blind?

Also, any hints, tips, tricks to help me out in this job will be greatly appreciated.

Yes, 802.11 would be more appropriate especially since hardware to run it on one of the "junk" ISM bands is cheap.

Yes, they are indeed useful, but they are very bandwidth-limited.
I wrote software for a 900 MHz band 802.11 application, and here in Silicon Valley, it was retry city.

Thank heavens I got rid of that 56k dial-up modem. Your reply got me to thinking. I think everyone who wants DXCC should have to scan all qsl cards in 32 bit true color with a minimum 4 megapixel resolution and have to forward all of them to 100 different organizations for verification. Upon verification, all 100 organizations would have to submit their findings, along with all of the 4 megapixel 32 bit true color - oh, all of these scans would have to be UNCOMPRESSED - to each of the other 99 organization.
Once all organizations had received all qsls in the aforementioned uncompressed true color 4 megapixel format, they would agree to each send their findings, along with the others' findings, along with all copies from all of the organizations, along with all of the scans, the verification back to the applicant. If nothing else, internet users would learn to love and appreciate DXCC the way some of us amateurs have. Yes, the ISP providers would gain a nice appreciation for DXCC also.

Hi all, I have the above listed HF amp, it's doing about 450w output thru 4 6LQ6 tubes. It is in good condition and has the 10m option installed. Does 160-10m. Has been checked by a tech and is working properly. Has had power switch replaced before I acquired it and it is not the appropriate switch, otherwise good condition.
Not really sure about shipping this thing as it is very heavy and I've never shipped an amp before so I'm just fishing around to see if anyone is interested. Includes amp and copy of manual. Priced at $300 shipped CONUS.
thanks and please email direct.

Do a web search for the word Supervozelj and that _is_ the correct spelling. This is the way they send high speed data from point to point in eastern Europe.

I've installed several Cisco 802.11 boxes in several buildings, but the antennas have all been omnidirectional so that everyone on that floor can use it. One of our bldgs has a dish directed to a high rise building a mile or so away and it's working fine with the Cisco boxes on each end. These devices may not be that expensive but the biggest expense is getting the RF out into the air with the necessary directionality and strength, and that means bigger high gain antennas and low loss cable so the antenna can be put up high. This is where the real expense is.

Hi, I would like to know some things on ham radios:

Where can you get one, or how is it possible to, and if so how, do you make one?
What happens if you use a ham radio in Mexico to talk to people in the US (legally)?
What is a good way to start using one?

Just some general info on getting started would be very usefull.

Thanks in advance.

Look at that pathetic web site. Rookies surely designed this one!
Geesh...I've seen better web sites done by high school first-year computer students. Give it a half hour to download and then be prepared to be bored.
Bottom line? Don't bother clicking on the link. It ain't worth the effort.
The page is poorly done and ranks among the bottom ten of sites NOT to visit. The author of this site should be ashamed. Siskel and Ebert would give this page only one half a star and that is being overly generous. Not even Geraldo would visit it...

If one may be so bold as to inquire about Stagger Lee's scholastic achievements...may I?
Stagger seems to be very well-versed in things electronic...unlike Roger, Doc, or the other cretins that haunt this group.
Stagger has tripped up and cajoled Roger and Doc on many occasions for comments they have made. Of course catching this duo disseminating misinformation is not a great task but the fact remains...Stagger has called them on the carpet more times than they can count.
Stagger...who are you? Will the real Stagger Lee step forward and identify him/herself? Give Roger and Doc your call sign if you have one so that Roger and Doc can spam you. That is, after all, their goal.
Me? I have no call sign. Sorry, Doc. Call me names...again and again.
Now go bury that huge prehensile proboscis in your own business.

If you think Stagger Lee is well-versed in ~anything~ you are as big an

Here's some of his ignorant blatherings:

Staggering Drunk Lee, the "Pulitzer prize award-winning writer" slobbered

Faggot Lee admits he's crossposted in order to help his pathetic,

I wonder what he looked inside of that got him all crazy like this. Has he ever looked inside, or used one of the JRC commercial receivers, or a 505/515? I doubt it.
Has he ever used a Yaesu FT-1000D (THE best performing reciever, Collins, Racal, and Harris, and others included, I have ever used!)?? He probably looked at a Kenwood R600, or maybe a Yaesu FRG7000, and he didn't like the "brown" PC boards he saw. Those (and others), WERE CHEAP, but they seem to be holding up well after all these years...
I would rather have a solid aluminum front panel, but polycarb is lots better than styrene, that's for sure. And for a handheld/portable, I wish just one of them older ones I dropped would have been polycarb.

My $.02 worth...

I LOVE Collins gear! I've owned several S-lines and a couple of KWM-2's. Sold the last of it only about a year ago. They have a sound all their own. HOWEVER... when the atmospheric noise moves in, shut down the Collins and go read a good book. With a ricebox, just engage the noise blanker and keep on talking.

I don't share "Lugnuts'" view of Icom, Kenwood and Yaesu. I think they're all outstanding performers... some a little more outstanding than others. You also won't need a supply of spare parts to keep 'em running. If he inherently doesn't want to send his bucks overseas, take a look at TenTec and Elecraft... both American made and both among the top performing radios in the industry.

The only JRC I've ever tried... a receiver +/- 10 years ago... impressed me as the worst piece of junk I've used since my S-38 in 1951. It was HORRIBLE. Of course it also belonged to an Electrical Engineer who is not a ham... no telling what he might have done to it before I used it.

My JRC twins have been in daily use for over 20 years.. NRD and NSD 515 RX-TX twins. The receiver features are a bit dated, but certainly the RF performance of the NRD-515 was among the top contenders when it was made. As long as I can work what I want and when, I'll keep them.

Most of the new radios will be obsolete by design, or the fact that replacement parts will be no longer available when they start failing in the next 15 or so years.

Custom uProccessor ICs, ROMs, etc. all fail, and when they do the devil will get his due when replacements are not to be had. Ditto for many of the custom LCD panel displays.

Oddly enough, the older technologies seem to be the most repairable, even in this day and age tubes are still plentiful.

Our club recently acquired a Yaesu FT-990 that has a physically broken glass display tube. We are in need of either the display tube, a complete display board, or a parts radio with a good display. If anyone can help, please e-mail me. Thanks, Kevin, K9HX

Just today (Fri Mar 29, 2002) http://www.slashdot.org had a very interesting discussion of 802.11 wireless and it's use in the amateur radio service. Several posters pointed out that high gain antennas are not that difficult to build yourself.

The thrust of the article was 802.11 wireless conversion to the amateur radio service (http://www.qsl.net/kb9mwr/projects/wireless/plan.html), and the conclusions were that it is not that daunting, and that the bandwidth is rather good, contrary to another poster's claims.

People even casually interested in getting in on the action, really owe it to themselves to look at the discussion at http://slashdot.org/articles/02/03/29/0157221.shtml?tid=126 for a rundown on the possibilities. Many universities have been putting up campus wide wireless networks with 802.11 equipment. It makes it much easier for the transient student population to get on the university net.

I was going to check Google for more Woger plagiarisms, until I saw the horrible spelling of "aberration" above -- spelling which isn't merely a

As many times as you retested you should be very knowledgeable about the have had to do so in the first place.

No questions asked, sure, but I bet they'd deny the sale if someone came in and acted as though they intended to transmit without a license. Last time I heard, RadioShack's policy was not to knowingly sell products to those who intend to use them illegally.

I broached this topic with the ARRL and Rad Shack some years back. Both said that to deny sales of Ham rigs to anybody would be a violation of the free trade agreement.(Make that income from sales) Both said that mere posession of Ham radios, license or not, is not a violation. Transmitting without a license is. I also made my position known to W5YI and his response fell in line with the ARRL.
What they said in short is that anybody can buy a Ham radio from Rad Shack, AES, or any other supply house so long as they can pay for it. No proof of license needed.
The sale of Ham radios to non-licensed persons is not illegal.
Perhaps this line of thinking should be addressed but until it is you can look forward to unending "pirate" operations on the Ham bands.
I do find it rather odd that sales of amplifiers MUST be accompanied with the inclusion of the Ham's call sign as part of the purchase. Go figure.
Now you know why I refuse to belong to the ARRL or any of it's affiliates.
Why waste my money?

That said, then NOT asking about a license makes perfect sense as RS policy since by NOT asking, RS can never be said to knowingly have sold a ham transciever to someone that intended to use it illegally.

Call it whatever you want. If it is the law "Free Trade Agreement", then that's the way it is.

That is 100% correct. Do you think otherwise?

So?

Makes sense to me. I bought my rig in 1957 BEFORE I was licensed.
Would you want that to be illegal?

> The sale of Ham radios to non-licensed persons is not illegal.

Correct again!

> Perhaps this line of thinking should be addressed but until it is you can > look forward to unending "pirate" operations on the Ham bands.

If you think that pirate radio is a function of non-hams buying rigs from commercial suppliers (RS, AES or whatever) you are not really thinking about all the alternative sources of rigs...sales at hamfests of used equipment, classified ads in magazines of used equipment by individual hams, etc.

In reality, even the amplifier sales find their way into pirate hands. It just can't be stopped.

Huh? What SHOULD the ARRL do regarding equipment sales to make you happy?

Does anyone have data showing the approximate distribution of US call signs by call area?

I am looking for data showing the percentage of continental US call signs in each of the ten call areas, 0-9, by percentage of total US call signs.

I do not care about the fact that for a given call sign number, the ham may not be located in one of the states normally associated with that call area.

HAM RADIO IN SPACE: RS-21 IN OBIT

Yet another ham radio satellite is now in space. This one is the Russian Radio Sport 21. Roy Neal, K6DUE, has the details:

Meet the latest ham radio satellite: RS-21. The newest ham radio satellite.

The satellite's formal name is the Russian-Australian Scientific and Educational Microsatellite Kolibri-2000. To most hams however, it is simply Radio Sport 21.

According to the AMSAT News Service, the new ham-sat was remotely launched on March 20th from a Russian Progress M-1-7 launcher that had brought supplies to the International Space Station. That launch took place after the Progress ship had un-docked from the I-S-S.

Alex Zaitzev, RW3DZ, the director of the Microsat Office of the Russian Space Research Institute, describes RS-21 as a non-government, non-commercial project, built with cooperation from students in Russia and Australia. It is currently in a circular orbit just over 200 miles above the Earth and on the air. Downlink frequencies are listed as 145.825 and 435.335 MHz.

The birds uses both CW and FSK for its telemetry transmissions, but it wont last very long. Zaitzev says that RS-21 was designed with a limited lifespan and that it will fall back into the atmosphere during the late winter or spring months. Till then though, RW3DZ, says that the satellite will send down data and digitally recorded voice messages.

Meantime, the L.A. Daily News reports that the current crew on board the International Space Station will be spending an extra month in orbit. Russian Cosmonaut Commander Yuri Onufrienko, RK3DUO along with American Astronauts Carl Walz, KC5TIE and Dan Bursch, KD5PNU will spend the time correcting problems with the Canadian built robotic arm used for ongoing I-S-S construction. This will mean the crew will be on board for a total of 189 days. This will be a new record for the US crew members on board the International Space Station. (AMSAT-NA)

HAM RADIO IN SPACE: HIGH SCHOOL CHEMISTRY EXPERIMENT TO THE ISS

A small science experiment at two Bloomington, Indiana High Schools is now headed for the International Space Station. A ham radio operator is helping to make it happen. Amateur News Weekly's Jack Parker, W8ISH, has the details from the home of Indiana University.

Eleven honors chemistry students from Bloomington North and Bloomington South High Schools have collaborated with NASA to prepare a protein crystal growth experiment. The protein, frozen since November, is now ready to be transported to the International Space Station.

Bloomington North advanced chemistry teacher Neil Rapp, WB9VPG will join the students as they travel to the Kennedy Space Center for the April 4th launch of the Atlantis space shuttle. Once the experiment is aboard the International Space Station, it will thaw and allow the crystals to grow. After the crystals are formed, they will be transported back to earth and studied by NASA, and eventually returned to the Bloomington High schools.

According to Neil Rapp, the formation of protein crystals is an important step in the development of drugs designed to cure various diseases.

Reporting for Amateur News Weekly, this is Jack Parker W8ISH.

All eleven chemistry students will be on hand for the launch of Atlantis. Each will receive a plaque and shirts designed to commemorate the launch of their experiment into space. (WB9VPG)

ARRL TO FCC: TIME TO RE-EVALUATE THE NOVICE BANDS

The ARRL has asked the FCC to eliminate the 80, 40 and 15-meter Novice and Technician Plus Morse code subbands. It also wants the FCC to reuse that spectrum, in part, to expand the radiotelephone allocations on 80 and 40 meters. Amateur Radio Newsline's Bruce Tennant, K6PZW has the details:

According to the ARRL Letter, a Petition for Rule Making filed March 22nd, the League requests that the FCC revise its Amateur Service rules in accordance with the modified Novice band refarming scheme the ARRL Board of Directors okayed in January. The Petition has not yet been put on public notice for comment.

Refarming is a government-ese term coined a few years back. Its a way of saying that spectrum assigned to a given radio service will be reassigned for other uses within that service. In this case, reassigning spectrum now primerally dedicated to Novice C-W operation to various other modes.

If the FCC approves the plan, current Novice and Technician Plus licensees would be permitted to operate on the 80, 40, 15 and 10-meter General-class Morse code allocations at up to 200 watts output.

The ARRL's petition also asks the FCC to permit amateurs to use spread spectrum on the 222 to 225 MHz band. It also requests an expand the pool of special event call signs beyond the 1 by 1 format to include identifiers for US territories and possessions that do not provide for mailing addresses. And it asks the FCC to clarify its rules to indicate that modulated CW is permitted for repeater station identification.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I’m I’m Bruce Tennant, K6PZW.

In its petition, the ARRL cited substantial advancements in the use of “digital techniques” in the HF bands such as PSK31 to bolster its assertion that a refarming plan is needed. The ARRL says that the Novice High Frequency sub-bands are underutilized and Amateur Radio cannot wait any longer on this issue. A copy of the ARRL's complete Petition for Rulemaking is available on the ARRL Web at www.arrl.org. (ARRL)

A NEWSLINE FOLLOW-UP: A POLITICALLY DISORGANIZED 11 METER CLASS D SERVICE

A few weeks ago we reported that the FCC has refused to hear an appeal by an Illinois C-B operator convicted of Disorderly Conduct for interfering with a neighbors home entertainment electronics. In the days since that report first aired, it caused quite a stir on several Internet discussion groups. Everyone wants to know how a service that once boasted 3 out of every 5 Americans with radios in their cars could wind up where the local sheriff or policeman could take an operator off the air.

After a bit of research, the answer seemed pretty clear. In one word: Politics. Here is Amateur Radio Newsline’s South East Bureau Chief David

Black, KB4KCH, with part 1 of a multi part look at the strange political side of 11 meter C-B.

--

When it comes to having political representation, most communication groups are in good shape. Hams have the American Radio Relay League looking after their political well being. Broadcasters have the powerful National Association of Broadcasters. Cellular telephone companies have the CTIA. Even the General Mobile Radio Service, which shares frequencies with the Family Radio Service, has representation amid the Personal Radio Steering Group. So, what form of communications lacks representation? That would be 11 meter, Class D Citizens Band radio. What does CB have? This:

Sound from 11 meter CB
--

Give CB a listen, and you hear lots of people using a service without any structure or formalized representation. Some might even call it anarchy.

--
More sound from 11 meters

Ironically, CB's lack of political power--as well as its inability to defend against bureaucratic attack--is not due to shortage of people using the airwaves. Many believe that next to cellular telephones, the second largest selling piece of 2-way radio equipment in the 20th century has been the CB radio.

During the gas crisis in the 1970s, many cars sported some sort of 11 meter whip and a cheap CB radio under the dash. Low cost 11 meter radios by the millions were manufactured, imported and sold. The industry had hobby magazines and several newspaper style newsletters devoted to CB radio.

CB operators outnumbered hams by at least 20 to one. And they outnumber GMRS users by 1000 to one.

But CB was not able to defend itself from outside pressures either back then or today. Why? Part of the reason goes back to CB’ers themselves in the 1970s and early 1980s. Most of them were not really interested in the service. It was just a utility. A way to help learn where to find the cheapest gasoline or avoid speed traps.

The CB radio service lacked any real monetary commitment. Without that, there was no political commitment. And when fuel prices began to ease, many but not all 11 meter operators pulled their radios out of their cars--and put them in the attic.

Then there were the few others, the die hard CB hobbyists. They treated CB channels 1 through 40 as a sort of ham radio-like hobby. Some operated illegally, but would take the chance just to make a DX contact. But they never organized. Why?

Different CB groups formed over the years. Many called themselves political messiahs of 11 meters. But many turned out to be bogus.

During the late 1970's and early 1980's, C-B radio scam artists were busy, trying to separate the 11 meter radio operator from his hard earned cash. As group after group appeared and then vanished, it became apparent to most using C-B that trusting anyone was too expensive. Now, more than 25 years later, trust in any C-B political organization seems little more than a remote possibility.

And what about the legal C-B operators? Those dedicated to public service? That part of the story, next week.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I'm David Black, KB4KCH.

Next week David tells us about the only successful C-B organization and the reason that it survived when the rest went away. (ARNewsline(tm))

SHORTWAVE: ARNEWSLINE VISITS AN SWL-FEST

From C-B to shortwave listening. Ham radio operators are not the only radio hobbyists who hold conventions. So do Short Wave Listeners and one of the most successful gatherings is Winterfest. Amateur Radio Newsline’s Steve Coletti took his tape recorder and visited this years gathering. He has this report:

--
AUDIO ONLY - NO TEXT. Download MP3 audio at www.arnewsline.org by clicking on the newscast number.

It may not be the size of the Dayton Hamvention or Huntsville Hamfest, but to Short Wave Listeners, Winterfest is truly the best. (ARNewsline(tm))

RADIO GROUPS: NEW MURS USERS GROUP FORMING IN CYBERSPACE

We have covered C-B and short wave listening. How about MURS -- the newly created Multi-Use-Radio Service. Well, according to an Internet posting, an organization called The MURS OPEN Group has begun work to form an Internet-based MURS User's Group. This group will be a non-profit corporation whose main goal will be to encourage the growth of Multi-Use Radio Service. CONVENTIONS: WELCOME TO HAM RADIO AT NAB

If you are planning a trip to the upcoming National Association of Broadcasters convention, be advised that the hams of Las Vegas are expecting you. Bill Croghan, WB0KSW, says that the Las Vegas Radio Amateur Club repeaters are up, active and hard linked.

Bill Croghan is the Chief Engineer of Lotus Broadcasting in Las Vegas. He says that on two meters try 146.94, minus 600 kHz offset with a 100 Hz access tone. This machine is now located on the Hilton hotel immediately above the Convention center, but on the opposite tower. From this site it should be useable from deep inside the Convention center and easily from anywhere on the Las Vegas strip.

If you would rather use a U-H-F machine try 448.500, minus MHz offset also with a 100 Hz access tone. This system is hard linked to the 2 meter machine but located on the old Tropicana hotel site as in years past. With the two systems linked any ham attending N-A-B with either a 2 meter or 70 centimeter radio can have fun and stay in touch. The convention takes place April 8th through the 11th at the Las Vegas Convention Center in Las Vegas, Nevada. (BEAN)

CONVENTIONS: WELCOME TO THE NAB HAM RADIO RECEPTION

Also, this years N-A-B Ham Radio Reception will take place Wednesday Evening, April 10th at 6 PM following the close of the exhibit hall. Location is the Hilton Convention Center in Ballroom B. The gathering is being co-sponsored by C-Q Magazine and Kenwood Communications. C-Q Publisher Dick Ross, K2MGA and Editor Rich Moseson, W2VU, along with Kenwood’s Paul Middelton, K4NUH, will be there as your host.

Amateur Radio Newsline will also be loitering around the convention and the Ham Radio Reception. We will be represented by Producer Bill Pasternak WA6ITF and by Todd Hitzeroth, N6ZXJ, who serves on the Young Ham of the Year Award committee. (CQ, ARNewsline(tm))

EMERGING TECHNOLOGY: KERMIT AND THE V-CHIP

Sesame Street’s Kermit the Frog has a new part-time job. According to news reports the little green guy will be put to work boosting the awareness of the television V-Chip.

The V-Chip is a mandatory internal accessory built into any T-V set larger than thirteen inches diagnal picture. The chip reads a digital code that contains a program's rating and can be programmed to block out television shows parents deem inappropriate for their kids.

Now the Hallmark Channel in conjunction with The Jim Henson Company, has donated the image of Kermit to the Federal Communications Commission for use in an upcoming promotional campaign to bring attention to the availability of the V-Chip. A new brochure to be distributed to the public by the FCC, the Hallmark Channel and other interest groups, will feature Kermit sporting a "V" with his fingers and urging parents to monitor the programming their children watch. INTERNATIONAL - ISRAEL: 500TH NEWSLETTER ON THE AIR

From Israel comes word that Mark Stern, 4Z4KX, recently celebrated the 500th edition of his ‘Newsletter on the Air’ for that nations Russian-speaking ham community. Stern, the former UP2OE, has been performing this service for the last 11 years every Saturday morning on 7.080 MHz.

Stern also seeks donations of used gear that he donates to newly arrived new-immigrant hams. As a result of his efforts many have gotten on the air in Israel in only a short time after their arrival in that nation.

And if all that were not enough for one ham, Stern is also the Israeli Award Manager and issues the awards and trophies for the Holyland and Israeli VHF-UHF Contests. (Hagal International)

DX

In D-X, hams are usually out looking for D-Xpeditions. Heres a twist. A future D-Xpedition is looking for you. Jeramy Boot, G4NJH, explains:

Have you always wanted to take part in a major D-Xpedition, but never known how to get on an expedition team? Now could be your chance. Ken Holdom, ZL4HU, the leader of 'The Kermadec DX Association's' planned operation from the Chatham Islands - ZL7 - later this year, is looking for experienced SSB and CW operators to accompany the group. "As this will be a 24-hour-per-day operation, we are looking for operators who feel they have the willingness and ability to operate during both day time and night time," Ken says. For further information please contact the Kermadec DX Association, PO Box 7, Clyde, Central Otago, New Zealand or e-mail to zl2hu@clear.net.nz.

Again, that e-mail address to apply is zl2hu@clear.net.nz (RSGB)

A D-Xpedition to San Felix became active on March 16th as X-R-Zero C. It was active for 14 days on all bands and modes. If you made contact, QSL via John Kennon, N7CQQ, P. O. Box 31553, Laughlin, Nevada 89028.

Lastly, N6DE and K6EP will be active from St. Croix through April 2nd. During the CQ World Wide S-S-B Contest, they will use the callsign WP2Z. QSL WP2Z contacts via KU9C, and non-contest QSO’s to each operator's home callsign address. (Various DX sources)

THAT FINAL ITEM: AN APRIL 1ST CB D-XPEDITION TO THE ISLE DU CONEY

Earlier in this week's newscast we reported that 11 meter C-B has no political clout. What it does have is a bunch of people who just want to have fun. Now, a group of them is planning what they call a People's Radio D-Xpedition from an exotic island location. Roving reporter Pierre Pullinmyleg is here with the details:

Hopefully, Pierre will be back a year from now to pull your leg once again. (The April Fools Day File)

Gee Randy, what do you want? Papers?

WHERE ARE YOU PAPERS!!!

Or 10 day waiting periods? I know, you need to have a cooling off period to buy your next piece of equipment!!

Geesh, this ASININE topic comes up again and again and again.
When are some people going to learn. You do NOT need papers to purchase HAM radio equipment! And I personally don't like the kind of 'society' for the HAM radio culture that kind of BS attitude implies.

To _CELEBRATE_ the death of the mother of the Great Parasite Of Windsor, and to encourage as many others as possible of that grasping family to either pop their clogs or to renounce the cancer that is the monarchy, Radio Hams may now compete for the PhD Award. ("Parasite has Died").

As with all PhD awards, the lucky winners will be fully qualified to be appointed to lectureships at the University Of Nottingham.

Winners will be entitled to use the letters "PhD" after their name and be addressed as "Dr". To claim your award, send two Cornflakes Packet Tops. For a further two packet tops, you will also be entitled to be addressed as "Your Selfpompousness RSCBium Councilae". For a further five packet tops, you will be further entitled to be addressed as "Your Royal Highness" and will be awarded an M3 license.

To be able to claim the award, you must contact 1 other person, by GSM phone, by PMR446, by CB Radio, or by Ham Radio.

This award will introduce Ham Radio to a wider audience and will help to fill the sadly-depleted coffers of the RSCB. ^H^H^H^H^H

But there is a time and a place for those opinions.

This is neither the time nor the place for yours.

WRONG! Everyone is entitled to their opinions AT ALL TIMES. The death of one of the great parasites of this country is a reason for public celebration.

There are 60 million people in this country.
If they're all lucky and live to be 100, and assuming that they're equally divided amongst the generations, then 600,000 will die every year.

That means that 1643 other people died in this country yesterday. Do they warrant a mention? Were they people who when ill jumped the queue and went straight into a hospital funded by the taxpayer? Were they parasites, or people who made a positive contribution to life, rather than being a net drain as was the mother of The Great Parasite?

1644 die every day. Do you mean to imply that at no time can anyone express an opinion, for there is almost certain to be one of the recently-dead who will be covered by any opinion?

Well said. The way that these parasites jump the queue and go straight into a hospital funded by the taxpayer is disgusting. We poor taxpayers have to wait months for our treatments.

What, pray, do your opinions on the Monarchy matter one iota to the radio amateur fraternity? I think your post should be directed to another newsgroup, for example, alt.bores. This would be the proper forum for the likes of you. Amateur Radio has always been outsude the realm of politics.

"You'll be a hard luck woman, baby till you find your man..."
-trippy attempting to get Aaron Henne to come to grips with his homosexuality, reverts to song.

"It's still better than wiggling your willy to pictures of Mr. T"
-Aaron Henne commenting on trippy's lack of oral sexual skills.

"What do you mean, it won't get hard?"
-Henne (aka Flaagg) all greased up and trippy has no where to go!

"God damnit Flaagg how many times I have to tell you? It's suck not blow, motherfucker."
-Menjy once again commenting on Flaagg's sexual failings.

"Fire in the HOLE! Oh MY God, fire in the HOLE!!!"
-Henne's womanly cries when Menjy mistakes the icy Hot for the Bung Grease.

"If you don't stop being so mean to me, I'm going to tell everyone "spade" is spelt wrong."
-A frustrated Ari Asikainen starts the argument in which he is trolled endlessly upon...

"Dog Gone!!!!!!!!!!"
-Desperate cry from Ari Asikainen, broken dog lease and jar of Vaseline in one hand, his prick in the other, when he discovers his dog has taken off, ruining his plans for a night of wild sexual pleasure.

Almost like clockwork this same idea come up, again and again, where some HAM laments that someone can get a radio without showing his license. And invariably there are people who express surprise that it's not illegal to do this! From the people who write nasty letters to Radio Shack (or say they do) to the people who get in a huff about "truckers using a 2M rig)".

I bought my Swan back in 1981 and it was my incentive to learn code.

I bought my Kenwood as my incentive to get off my behind and over to the Dallas FCC office to upgrade.

I got my dual-bander in my car as a gift.

I bought my K2 as my incentive to get back on HF and upgrade to use it.

I'd just like to ask some of these HAMs where they'd be if they had to PROVE operating privileges before they could buy a piece of equipment. Of if they ever got a piece of equipment as a gift. (Yeah, it's a hot topic with me. I just put these kind of people into the automatic classification of 'snob HAMs'. The kind that go to stores and try to 'show off' that they have an HT on their belt, and when someone expresses an interest in it, they say "it's not CB and not for you" and walk away. (I personally witnessed an ASSHOLE HAM do that in a Radio Shack a few years ago. So I interrupted, showed the kid the book from 5W to 1000W, and told him there were assholes everywhere, even in HAM radio. Yeah, I have to admit, I was hoping the guy would get really hot, but he just fumed and stomped out of the store.)

What's wrong with that?
It's admirable putting CB equipment to legitimate amateur radio use.

What a pity that it's impossible to convert CB-ers into REAL radio Folks should not be "slamming" CB radio. It's enough to listen to that bullshit and it slams itself.

Hi.

If you follow-up to one of these newsgroups, could you please CC.
your reply to my E-mail address, if possible?

I recently purcased a used TS-940. Although the manual was included, it was not very forthcoming about the details of the two "Accessory terminals". "ACC1" is a 6-pin DIN connector and the manual has no information whatsoever about this connector. "ACC2" is a 13-pin DIN connector and, although the manual at least labels these pins, it has no information on how to use its connections.

I am wondering if anyone can point me to any internet-accessible interface protocol specification for these two connectors. I would like to obtain enough information to home-brew a hardware interface to the shack PC, and to write my own software for things like controlling the TS-940 from the PC, automatic log entry of time, frequency, etc., if this information is availablve through the interface. In addition to any available protocol specification, any articles, application notes, etc. would also be useful.

Thanks and regards.

Every so often a guy like Randy comes up with the mistaken idea of placing restrictions on the wide availability of amateur radio equipment and supplies. These are the folks who suggest it be a crime to own amateur equipment without a license, and who are not thrilled about the fact that Radio Shack sells a line of UHF/VHF amateur equipment right out under the nose of the impressionable public. I suspect they don't like the idea that soldering guns and schematics are openly sold to those without the proper credentials also.

While it is easy, on the surface, to agree with their goal (keeping amateur equipment out of the hands of bootleggers), I feel the attitude that amateur equipment should be treated as some sort of controlled substance is short-sighted and in fact damaging to our service.

I live in a large metropolitan area. We have one full line amateur store in town. There are no other similar stores in the whole state. In the four states which border us, there are 2 more amateur radio stores. THAT'S IT! In 5 states, there are only 3 stores! In the whole country, my guess is that there are less than four dozen stores selling amateur radio equipment, antennas, and supplies! It is as though we were some secret society, bent on concealing our presence from the world.

Not all that many years ago, there were at least 6 electronic stores here in town which sold amateur equipment (not exclusively, but they all had a good selection). Add to that two Heathkit stores, and even the Sears stores sold amateur transceivers for awhile. (Yes, Virginia, right there along with the Craftsman sockets and Silvertone TV sets.) In the same era, Radio Row in NYC was blocks of wall-to-wall storefronts catering to electronics experimenters. Popular Science magazine had a regular column about amateur radio, and occasional construction articles. Every second little town had an amateur radio club. Amateur Radio was a populist, Joe SixPack kind of hobby.

During those years it was easy for a person to get interested in being an amateur, to shop around for the best deal on equipment, and to meet an Elmer. We were visible to the public, and well regarded.

Then somewhere along the line came the magic of 1-800 shopping, amateur radio marketing became streamlined, and radio stores disappeared from Hometown America. With the demise of the local radio store, all the Elmers disappeared into their shacks and newcomers flounder around in fancy four-color ads in back of CQ and QST magazine, trying to decide how to be a ham. Clubs floundered, in part due to the loss of hams around the coffee pot in the back of the local electronics part store.

Rather than continuing to restrict the availability of amateur equipment, as though we were selling assault weapons or recreational pharmaceuticals, I vote for opening up the market. Let's have radios for sale in the strip malls alongside the video games, Lionel trains, and mountain bikes. And it won't hurt if a few of us put on our Elmer-suits and lurk around to spot the likely recruits.

When they outlaw ham gear, only outlaws will be hams.

with these useless internet discussions because they are based on nothing serve any real purpose other than permitting people to vent hatred and there is just far to much of it in the world. Read the front page of your local

3: We will be happy to share with you material -- but only as time permits.
Besides, every bit of it -- and I do mean e-v-e-r-y bit of it is and long has been in the public domain. Our sources go back to the late 1950's and through the 1960's, 1970's and 1980's. Which leads to:

4: In reality, it is nothing that has not been published and republished in such venerable vehicles as the old Westlink Report, CQ Magazine, 73 Magazine (neither of which were/are anti CB) and a great, great deal in CB Radio News (1957 - 1979)and CB Magazine. The latter two had nothing at all to do with Amateur Radio and were very, very viruently anti-ham radio.

Probably the reason that neither is being published any longer. Do you remember either of these two -- or Wayne Green at 73 taking on the Communications Attorney Service Inc. and its 300,000 subscribers who each paid $50 a piece to a con artist? Or CB Radio Times taking on the CB Leagal Service which boasted 50,000 subscribers in 1976? Probably not.

and Part 3 the following week.

rec.radio.cb is a internet usenet newsgroup. for someone who CLAIMS to be quite aquainted with the internet, you sure are in the dark alot. and another thing, where'd you learn how to type?

As you see, Bill, I just insulted you twice in the last sentance, this is what this article was to most CB'ers, an insult, You're basically slapping

all CB'ers in the face and saying the Amateur Radio Service is better than CB Radio. and futher more, you're trying to whitewash the service and make like the Amateur service is better. Which it isn't, The Amateur Radio Service has it's problems too, K1MAN for instance, 14.313, 75 meters, 14.275, the list goes on and on.....

Your right, you didn't ask me for anything, I personally took ISSUE with YOUR SLANDERIOUS COMMENTS towards a radio service that I use on occasion, I took issue with YOU slapping the faces of every CB'er in the world, by indirectly calling them Law-Breakers, Stupid, and basically trying to run the CB Radio Service into th ground, to make the Amateur Radio Service look good. Which is in face a LIE. the Amateur Radio Service has it's self, in face does have problems.

So in other words, We'll get it too you, when WE feel like WE have the trying to weasel out of providing me SOLID facts as to your story.

And I answer that with.... You ever read the announcements in QTH Classifieds??? You ever hear of the scams pulled on E-Bay? BY HAMS TO

HAMS??? My point???? Amateur Radio operators ARE NOT these perfect little people, who never do ANYTHING wrong... and yes, I remember all that stuff,

THE GOOD DOCTOR seems to be terribly confused.
Perhaps the strain of _BOASTING_ that he has a PhD and then being unable to substantiate it publicly is getting to him?

THE GOOD DOCTOR is certainly responding in a childish manner, using the behaviour of the school playground. Cognoscenti of this NG will know that he has chosen to make a fool of himself time and time again in this NG, and is now having an attack of sour grapes.

There is a matter of public concern here. THE GOOD DOCTOR has _BOASTED_ here that he is a lecturer at Nottingham University. Do we want our young people to be tutored by someone whose public persona is excessively childish, as evidenced by his infantile outburst below?

However disasteful and shameful that message was (and it WAS!) Radio Ham has a perfect right to express his opinions in the manner he chooses.

To hurl pathetic, infantile, personal abuse at him shows only your own shortcomings.

MY RAE pass slip is not a C&G one! It is a GPO one. In the late 50's, the May RAE was run by C&G and the September RAE by the GPO.
All Morse tests were run by the GPO, mainly at their Radio Surveyors' offices situated at seaports, or at GPO Coast Stations.

In those days, examinations were taken seriously.

Hi there and thanks for reading this.

I am desperately looking for company who would be willing to take on the repair and refurbishment if necessary of the following radio:

Sommerkamp TS788DX

10m Multimode mobile rig (100w)

If you know of somebody who is suitable qualified and has access to the appropriate test equipment I would like to hear from you. I have tried Castle Electronics who have stated that it would not be worth their while.

Thanks a lot

WRONG! It was neither distasteful and shameful.

Consider the following...
Currently the noble Al Qa'eda (as opposed to the cowardly Yanks and Brits) are being killed, but at the same time, they are being discussed and their political cause is being discussed. Therefore, it is quite in order to discuss political causes at the same time as rejoicing in the deaths of those fools who follow political causes that are a cancer on humanity.
Monarchy is one such cancer.
QED.

I stand corrected. You are quite right. Put it down to the Alzi....Alz....memory loss. My first line should have read "waving a C&G or GPO (first time) pass-slip...."

You could also go to St Martins-le-Grand, for those with access to

Well, enlighten us, then. I understood you to say that you had been a Class B before taking the 12wpm and becoming a Class A.

I put up a different definition of a Class A - based on getting the qualifications first, and not one at a time, and going from SWL to Class A.

As most who read my posts are already aware, I have blown 6JS6C tubes in my FT-101ee. For replacement, I was going to try to obtain a matched replacement set until I found out the price. A well known firm just quoted GE and NEC prices for a matched pair of 6JS6C at $135 and $160, respectively. I recently purchased this FT-101 for $150, so it doesn't make much sense to spend more than I paid on a new set of tubes. So, I'm wondering about personal experiences converting to 6146B tubes, based on a fairly recent past QST article. Any successes, failures, or any other tips would be much appreciated.

Thanks,
AB

I don't have a suggestion, but I have a comment. I remember when you could get horizontal sweep tubes like 6LQ6, 6KD6, etc for about five bucks apiece, and it wasn't all that long ago. Though the quality may not be equivalent to domestic tubes, there are new [mostly audio] tubes coming out of China and Russia for reasonable prices, and it really irritates the living heck out of me to see these money-lusting opportunists driving the prices up on American NOS just because there are idiots who will pay it while the rest of us have to suffer without..

I don't know that you're gonna find 6146's any cheaper, cuz just about twenty years ago you could rob them out an old commercial mobile rig or get them from almost any local ham who had them laying around in the ham shack, but from what I understand these are now difficult to find as well. Guys used to give their old equipment away to people who needed it, but all of sudden anything which is labeled as "vintage" or "obsolete" is made out of gold, and people literally hoard it for the "collectibility" and make it unaffordable to those of us who need it for practical or recreational use..

Fortunately, I have a selection of NOS audio and RF tubes to use as replacements for my own equipment, cuz even though I can afford new tubes i'd probably let my equipment sit on the shelf and gather dust before catering to the "collectors" and greedy consumer slavemasters..

I passed the C&G RAE on Princess Margaret's wedding day. It was held at school, by special arrangement. It was a school holiday , but the physics master kindly came in to invigilate (it was between 5 and 8pm).
I passed, and I always had a soft spot for HRH since!

> wondering about personal experiences converting to 6146B tubes

I had the pleasure of dealing with one of them attempts with an old cheap guy next door who tried to do it to save $16 on tubes on the 70's.
Converting is a nightmare, if you dont know how to do it stay away.
First you have the a serious re-socketing/mounting issue/rewiring.
Then after that you find the ALC, neutralization, bias must be reworked.
In the end you will likely with end up with an RFI spewing oscillator ...its not worth it $150 is cheap for a 101EE pay the $135 or find some good pulls

Hey.....Thats cheap for a 101EE id pay the $2

In case Dan doesn't hang out here anymore, someone who knows his e-mail address please forward this.

Dan;

I've heard about the screw job Riley is giving you. He can't do it! Look at his title: Special COUNSEL for Amateur Enforcement. In otherwords, he's just the little pee-on lawyer for the enforcement branch of ham radio. HE HAS NO POWER! All he can do is schedule re-testing for problem children.

What he does is THREATEN hams with action if they don't abide by a self-imposed suspension. But the FCC NEVER takes any action against hams that do bad things on the ham bands!

Case in point: K1MAN. He's still on. He knows Riley can't do anything about him. And he knows the rest of the FCC won't do anything against him.

Another case: WA9KJI. Has had more FCC complaints than any other ham. Even told an FCC official on 40 meters to get lost while he was transmitting on a designated emergency traffic net. CONSTANTLY violated his so-called "quiet hours". Even chased an FCC guy off his property! Riley won't do a thing to him cuz he can't.

It's all smoke and mirrors. The ARRL trumps this guy up in the hopes that ham radio ops will behave. But Riley is going after the wrong people! You know it. I know it.

Yes..I have heard proposes to eliminate 11 meters for the "Citizen Band" returning it to the ham spectrum where it originated.. With FRS type radios, "Citizen Band" would be what it was intended. Short distance..low power. There were a couple of articles on it, one on QRZ.

I think that you are both wrong about CB.

Back when the CB boom of the '70s was on, the CB radio manufacturers did a pretty good job of representing the service (they were representing themselves, really). They even lobbied for an expansion from 23 channels to 40 channels, and got their way. There were movies being made about CB, there were tv programs being made about it, and the whole area was booming. The CB manufacturers were even attempting to take over portions of the VHF ham bands, and it looked as though they just might succeed.

But the boom was a fad.

Then the bottom dropped out of the CB radio market. Whole warehouses of radios went unsold, and manufacturers were going belly up in droves. It was very much like the dot com implosion of the past 18 months, and CB passed out of the public mind as the fad ended.

Once the thought that big profits could be made selling CB equipment faded, the strong representation by equipment manufacturers faded too, and the band languished.

All that were left were dyed-in-the-wool hobbyists, and the band grew no more. The hobbyists, unfortunately, think that any laws governing the band are a joke and behave accordingly. I think that in the not too distant future the band will be eliminated. It is irrelevant now that other services (cell phones, FRS, etc.) are available to the public, and only inertia keeps the FCC from dropping the 11 meter band entirely.

If you are ready for a high performance multi-band HF mobile antenna, then I ask that you visit www.qsl.net/k4kwh. This is a very heavy duty screwdriver-type antenna and goes beyond the cheap materials often seen in some others. Here are the basic specs.

Carolina Cyclone I

Full 2" loading coil (compare to 1 1/2" on DK3 copies)
#14 silver plated copper windings (compare to skinny little #16 wire on DK3 derivatives)
Wound at 8 turns per inch (compare to 10 TPI on DK 3)
Extra heavy duty finger stock using 1/4" wide fingers and extra springy for complete contact (compare to the little copper or brass stuff that breaks easily)

Handles up to 800 watts SSB (Try that with a PVC screwdriver coil!) impedance matching done with a simple little inductor at the feedpoint. No toroids to give "finicky" performance/matching up on the higher bands.

And all without breaking the bank like those $300+ versions! Just $240 shipped to the lower 48 states!

Hey, guys, it's SPRING (at least in the South), and it's time to get out and get that mobile up and running!

Sorry to be a history nut but the Amateur Service was only the last holder of a set of garbage frequencies (26.96-27.23, channels 1-22 and the RCs) that in fact we didn't want. Eliminating 27MHz CB and 'returning' it to the Amateur Service are two entirely different actions. As one of the very few Amateurs who ever ran on 11 meters when it was legal -- and that only because it was the only band where fax/SSTV was legal -- I vas dere Sharlie and even in the great 1958 spot cycle it was a wasteland primarily because Europe and Africa never had it as an amateur assignment.

Long and short, don't blame us for whatever happens: we did not want it then, we do not want it now.

It's a hopeless case. I just saw a transceiver listed in E-Bay's amateur radio section. It was either a 4 or 5 band (A,B,C,D ... you get the idea). AM, SSB, and FM - and, of course, a ROGER BEEP! I doubt any one buying a Radio Shack HT or VHF/UHF mobile rig will be able to use it without a license. They might get away with it, but I doubt for long. Currently, we do have some idiot in the Rochester, NY area (obviously a kid) who occasionally jams the input of our 10 meter repeater. He's smart enough not to stay on more than a few seconds at a time and we only have a general idea of where he is located. Again, I doubt anyone without a license is likely to get much use out of the rig. To use it simply to have fun and jam a repeater is stupid and and expensive way to get your kicks. The real problem (freebanders and especially truckers) is going to take real enforcement, even if it means someone might lose his tractor. I see EEI went bankrupt and the parent company has (apparently) started up another corporation selling the same 'stuff' and even uses 'EEI'. Oh well. Heck, if the CEOs of Enron and Global Crossings can pay themselves millions in bonuses and then the company files for bankruptcy the following day - including the loss of pensions for thousands of employees - I just don't see much likely to happen concerning enforcement of communications regulations.
We have the best government money can buy.

Well here is my problem. Part 95 specifically states:

"95.413 (CB Rule 13) What communications are prohibited?
(9) To communicate with, or attempt to communicate with, any CB station more than 250 kilometers (155.3 miles)
away;"

It seems to me that your 3,000 QSL cards exhibit an ongoing and wanton disregard for the law, and are symptomatic of the CB service itself.

It is difficult for those of us who are amateur radio operators and who DO follow FCC regulations (in this case, part 97) to have respect for those who routinely engage in lawlessness. We fight very hard to keep lawlessness out of our own service (and it does exist), because it ruins the hobby for everyone.

When 11 meter CB gear can no longer be sold in the U.S., it will be "professional" operators like yourself who caused it to happen.

Congratulations, and I mean that.

1) For surviving four spot cycles more or less intact.
2) For a fine choice of antenna.
3) For pretty well representing a sub-group in the CB maelstrom who really have not been much of a problem to anyone for many years.
4) For showing that a clean, relatively lo-power station is really the way to go as opposed to the 'how many pills' school of operation.

I am going to assume that you are SSB and not totally 'stock' and that's OK. One reason you might not hear them is that they are FM and too wide for the passband filters on your receiver; the allocations are for some pretty wide FM if, as you say, they are used at all. The availability of repeaters has made the VHF/UHF spectrum certainly the frequencies of choice as I am sure your frequency-coordinator buddy will confirm although he does not handle government freqs. You are undoubtedly aware that parts of the so-called freeband are marine assignments in some countries and we do not assign there; 27.67-28.0 for example in Australia and are more than likely FM as well on 20 kHz splits and again would exceed the SSB filter width. See http://www.vkham.com for specific channels. Just how much activity is there rather than the more usual 156.8 vicinity your guess is probably better than mine. And as you must admit, freebanders have caused some abandonment by simply blasting the occasional users off the map; not everyone can run reggae continuously to protect their freq.

As outlaws go, you have indeed been solid citizens and not a big pain but the angel suit does need to be sent to the dry cleaners.

Yes, Ron. That's the article I was referring to. It can be found on the ARRL website and accessed if you are a member. What I'm looking for here is the results that people have had when following the article's instructions.
I really don't want to take on this task without some input from others who have actually performed the mod.

Why do you insist on using the term "freebanders?" The correct term is "criminals."

A contradiction in terms -- no such thing as a "legitimate freebander."

And, since when did working DX on CB become legal?

Part of the reason that tube prices went up is due to fewer being made and sold.
I saw this while working in my brothers TV repair shop.
6146's are much lower priced compared to those 6js6c's, at least on the web site I had located by doing a search..
And, IMO, are a bit more durable.
Though I never used them to replace the 6js6c's...
Need to change the socket for that.

Yes, I know. I wish there was something that could be done but I guess it is the rarity of the tube that drives the price way up. I notice that almost all sweep tubes these days are high priced. Also, I guess they're not really meant for RF amplifier service and better suited for 70's televisions, which would also be a contributing factor. One often wonders why reputible manufacturers would have used them anyway as RF amp tubes. Cheaper at the time I suppose.

Just a few years ago, I probably had a dozen 6JS6's. Not thinking I would ever be going back to tube equipment, I practically gave away close to 500 tubes. Now, obviously, I'm seriously regretting my mistake!

I've always liked to troubleshoot and repair my own equipment. With tube equipment, I am quite the novice but I know this will improve over time. Earlier solid state rigs were challenging to repair, but I almost always managed to get them up and running again, at least 80 percent of the time. Today's modern rigs are beyond my capabilities to repair, especially with all the surface mount components involved. Therefore, I tend to avoid them but the door is then opened to earlier rigs. However, obtaining parts gets more and more difficult as the equipment ages. This Yaesu tube situation is a good example. It's unfortunate for those like me who like to keep older equipment functional.

BTW, I'd like to thank those people who provided several alternatives to obtaining the 6JS6C's at more reasonable prices. I intend to look into these further.

If I decide to convert to the 6146's, I'll post the results since there seems to be little feedback info. regarding this subject.

Thanks again and please continue to share opinions and experiences with the 6146 conversion.

Hello Mr. Lee,

It's hard for me to equate the violation of the 155.3 mi. rule with a "wanton diregard for the law," but let's say that it IS "symptomatic" of a "problem." What are you personally doing to try to alleviate the problem?

While I certainly don't condone out-of-band operation and/or excessive power output, I don't believe for a moment that working DX on the legal 40 channels with 12 watts P.E.P. makes one morally deficient, a social deviant, or a criminal. There are plenty of "laws" that are not only silly and unenforceable, but just downright wrong. Before you say, "Well, if everyone just chose the laws they're going to follow, then society would be doomed." STOP! That's exactly what happens, and society is no worser for the wear. Most everybody goes through a thought process when they obey rules, regulations, laws, etc. and makes a conscious decision as to the merit of said law and the consequences of breaking said law. When you stop at a red light, you don't do so just because those in authority told you to, right? You know it'd present a dangerous situation and is for the benefit of us all. Same with speeding. No one can argue that stealing from others, whether directly or by fraud, etc. is wrong. However, there ARE some laws that are routinely broken and they are broken because individuals have made a conscious decision that this particular infraction is sufficiently minor or that said law is just plain wrong. (And the fabric of the time/space continuum remains intact.)

Are you aware that up until recently, (Just a few years ago, if memory serves me.) tha last southern state removed a law from the books that prohibited inter-racial marriages. Now if this offends your sensiblilties as a human being, then I'd say you're pretty normal. But it was a law, and the law's the law, right? How would you counsel your own son or daughter if they faced the decision of moving out of state or living as "criminals." Gee, "criminal" is kinda harsh, eh? But hey, the law's the law! Thankfully, there are federal laws that struck these down, even though they were still on the books. The really frightening thing is that there was opposition to the removal of these laws from the books. Now I realize that this analogy is a bit extreme, but what about jaywalking on a street with no traffic or cruising with the pack at 60 m.p.h. as opposed to 55? I understand the zeal of those who want to follow the letter of the law, but some common sense must be added to the mix. Everything is not black and white or cut and dry. There are some folks that'd still be holding their breath today if breathing were outlawed yesterday, to each their own. Wonder how that soccer mom is doing? You remember, the one that got dragged out of her station wagon, handcuffed, and arrested in front of her terrified kids...for violating the couny's seatbelt law. Hey, the law's the law. Damn criminal!

I think his 3000 QSL cards exhibit the characteristics of 11-meter propagation and human nature. If you hear a distant station, say hi.

I realise this, but such has not always been the case. People in general weren't so greedy and money hungry until just a few decades ago, and were more willing to give things away to those in need. It's not so much that people nowadays want money for their goods, but rather the outrageous profit margins that perpetually rise because of "lack of availability" and the lust for money on the part of those who hold us in virtual consumer slavery..

Example: I used to collect coins as a hobby. Why is it that when a new commemorative coin such as the Susan B. Anthony or Eisenhower dollar, the Kennedy half dollar or the new state quarters are issued, the yuppie idiots immediately run down to the banks and buy hundreds or thousands of them to stick up in a closet and sit for decades, and save every single one that they get in change, thus limiting the legitimate collectors of the pleasure of finding and/or affording them for their hobbies? The same can be held true for vintage ham radio equipment, parts and accessories..

I'm from the old school when people put more value on kindness, reason and human compassion than riches, and i'm not at all impressed by what I see nowadays. There are entirely too many selfish people in the world today..

It's called free market capitalism, where the demand regulates supply. If there are a few items many people want, prices will go up. It's a beautiful concept when you think about it. So simple and natural.

Because they know that years later collector idiots will pay good money for shiny quarters no one bothered to save when they were widely available?

The solution is simple: we have to establish a Central Committee which will nationalize all the vintage ham radio equipment and which will then redistribute it according to the needs of the people.

Bullshit. This is nothing but geezers' cry about the good old times. It's never as it used to be - it was always better when we were young, wasn't it? Even when there was slavery, tyranny, plague, no elections, no electricity, no food, no fire...

My Follow Up
Why are the ham operators so concerned with the so called criminals (freebanders) Like I said the few of us respect where they are at and avoid there frequencies .As far as the 155.3 miles goes who are we harming.The few of us who do operate in those freqs have freq lists and know what a particular freq is used for and avoid them .
Dont forget Iam only saying a small percentage of us operate professionally .The bottom line I guess is that Iam doing what a ham operator does at less of a cost in equipment and not being licensed..I have made many contacts around the world and have made a lot of friends just as the ham operators do.There are probably more organized 11 meter Dx clubs than hams .I will bet you there are even some hams that are on those freqs but wont admit it (you guys know why) the DX is good..

On CB, violating Part 95 has no real consequences, but annoying other CB operators does have consequences. Hence, CB is run by "pack rule", and not the law of the land. We who are critical of CB think that it should be the rule of law which dominates rather than the rule of the pack.

Enough already!

People who have difficulty with an inconvenient concept (obeying the law) always get wordy when they attempt to justify law breaking. There is no noble cause or unjust law here -- just operators who want to do whatever pleases them, and whose actions say "to hell with everyone else."

It's simple:

1. It is against U.S. law to talk to any CB station more than 250 km distant.

2. Any CB operator who does so is breaking the law.

3. Any CB operator who intentionally and repeatedly does so is showing wanton disregard of the law.

Therefore, Mr. Werz has been operating in wanton disregard of the law.

Look: I don't happen to like quite a few of the regulations governing amateur radio, because I regard some of them as downright silly. If I applied your logic to Part 97, why I'd be using whatever mode I wanted in the portions of the bands reserved for CW. If the non-U.S. stations can operate ssb there, why shouldn't I, especially if I want to have a nice DX contact with one of them?

The answer is: It is against the law, and I don't do it. Neither do most of my fellow operators. Instead, we lobby to have the law changed if it really bugs us.

The only people who have difficulty grasping the idea of obeying the laws are those who need to rationalize their own law breaking.

Hi Folks,

Just to clear the air on some issues....

It wasn't the content of the article that got me fired up about that article.... it was the way it was presented... it was just the tone of the person presenting the article, they made it SOUND like they were making sport of CB'ers.... anyone that listened to the audio file, knows what I'm talking about.

I'm not saying WA6ITF was lying about his article. He was white-washing Amateur Radio, making it sound like Ham radio was perfect... However, The stuff he was saying was true, But he made it sound like CB is so horrible, and in some places, it might just be that. But NOT Everywhere!

As to thier assertation that CB'ers run linears because they wanna be pirates, Above the law, ect... Is just plain STUPID! You guys wanna know why CB'ers run amps??? Try keying up on a 4 Watt CB in the mobile, during the day, when the sunspot (or skip as it is called by some) activity is really going... you'll lucky to be heard across the street!!! People run amps, becuase they wanna get out over the SKIP! anymore, if you're not running at least 500-600 watts in the mobile, you ain't being heard, I don't give a hoot what you're running for a radio or antenna.

Bottom line is, WA6ITF, needs to stick to reporting Amateur Radio Related stuff and leave the CB band and it's troubles to the FCC.

73 to all and with this, I will leave this subject alone!

Two items, JJ. Most agree and most who have any brains or ambition are long gone leaving what amounts to 1970 Mississippi or Alabama. You would be wise, however, to purge collective nouns like 'CBer' and look at the subgroups of which there are many rather than point too blunt a finger. Some of them:

1. Bowlers, a poor imitation of the lo end of 20 meters in the AM days. Total idiots.

2. AMers in general wandering all over creation with antique equipment they just bought.

3. SSB freebanders who are by and large reasonably civilized if not completely clued in.

4. Truckers trying to escape from all of the above and below. With respect to 10 meters I wonder sometimes if they are attackers or refugees. Empty question: kill them all and God will know his own.

5. The insane: Channel masters and the like. Truckstop Annies and Andrews.

6. The sheep. Limiters limit and no red-blooded American likes limits so clip the limiter. Right. And every broadcast station uses brick wall limiters to INCREASE talk power. Sell them a power mike, a line-ee-ar, a turbo-tune and a partridge in a pear tree. Smear them mudducks and where are the Mods. This isn't radio it's a religious experience and when you wave money there is always a clergyman to take it, the Right Reverend Red down at Happy Larry's Truck Stop, Mortuary, Wedding Chapel, and Emporium of CB Delights.

7. Assorted Juveniles of the type that frequent newsgroups with Trojan Loops and similarly low-class vandalism.

8. The Terminally Cool. My hardware is cool, therefore I am cool. See my tinted headlites, virginity lamps, neon tubes, fuzzy dice, plastic Jesus, etc. and two, count 'em, two cool antennas on my rusty '84 F-100. Right up there with limos with IMTS antennas long after IMTS is gone.

There may be something to be said for keeping all the nuts in one bag on a band no one really cares about.

The spots soon will be gone along with a large percentage of CB problems.

As you noted I am not particularly worried one way or the other what you do and it is, I think, a fair statement that us long-termers probably care less than the more recent converts. There is no teetotaler like an ex-drunk and no proselyte like a recent convert.

But I do have some questions:

1. You made your decision and live with it, fair enough. So why do you care what me, any other amateur, or anyone else thinks? Why try to justify it?

2. DXing is not my can of worms and never really was. It might be neat at 190 kHz on five watts and definitely keeps one awake on 50 MHz but DXCC on a weekend on 10 meters is certainly possible on pretty cheap gear. Same propagation gods smile on 10 and 12 just like they do on 11. About the only thing that changes is cheaper postage thru the bureaus.

3. Do you want approval and respect to go with the 3000 cards? You won't get it for an imitation of real radio no matter how good the imitation. Do your thing, don't ask, don't tell and we will rub along just fine. And at the bottom of the spots I will be dittybopping on 30 meters and you won't. Why not just leave it at that?

99.5 percent of the folks who operate on CB are dimwits, fools, lawbreakers, and simpletons. And those who defend them do not even come up to that standard.

Are you saying that if I am not running 500 watts mobile, I am not being heard?

That's very weird.

I run QRP 5w and get heard all over the world.

Anyone in a car with 500w of RF flying around may be asking for more than they bargained for.

And speaking of "crap-holes", forget not that the Dynamic Duo lives within inches of bankruptcy in a wooden hovel that is rotting away under their very hooves. Cockroaches and birds are the game of the day in that luxury hovel, but running water and a working septic are not.
This dou coughs and hacks day in, day out, and nobody has yet to determine if this is due to the Cannabis upon which they imbibe or if the cough is due to the the diesel fumes of the semis that pass within 20 feet of their front door. Living mere inches from a major interstate has drawbacks but it is tempered by the fact that they live only a few yards from a liquor store.

I know I am crossposting, but am hoping that someone in some group can answer my questions.

I picked up a small linear this past weekend with intent to use it VHF high band. I have no clue if that was its true intention, so I am asking:

1) What frequencies might this cover?

2) What would be the power output?

Here are the details: VHF Engineering, Model PA4010H, Serial: 165X

Transistor inside: Motorola pill 2N6084

I do find that responding to a blatant troll like this makes you as bad as them, but I have to say that you, sir, using the name Radio Ham, are a disgrace to the name when you use it to deliver such an opinion. I DO believe in free speech, and I agree that you CAN and DO have this opinion. Nevertheless, I find your timing and wording an insult.

I will not, however, stoop to the level of questioning your parentage or any other personal insults.

Because there is a legal means of doing what they want to do, but they don't want to do it. It is highly suspected that they are just being lazy, and don't want to study a little to pass the ham license. Lazy people rightfully get little or no respect.

If the FCC should ever decide to really enforce the law, you're toying with some fines with lots of zeros behind a non-zero leading digit.

I don't know who you're hurting - maybe your kid that gets the idea that obeying laws is optional. Or the other guy's kid - the other guy you're talking to. Or maybe some legal users on the frequency you don't know about. Maybe the reputation of the USA as being composed of lawless individuals, not that the rest of the world doesn't already have that opinion from seeing all the drug dealing, murders, etc. we have. You're not in fine company there...

>Dont forget Iam only saying a small percentage of us operate professionally

Exactly. So by participating, you're promoting the use of illegal frequencies, which attracts the "non-professionals", that likely don't have or care about a list of legal users and cause them interference.

>.The bottom line I guess is that Iam doing what a ham operator does at less >of a cost

Huh? Howzzat? Your antennas cost less? As for the rig, you could take the exact one you already have, retune it, and use it _legally_ on 10 meters. Might not even have to retune it if you are already illegally there.

>in equipment and not being licensed..

What's a license cost right now? I think its somewhere around a couple books of stamps, or a carton of cigarettes. Yeah, that ought to break a bank...

>have made many contacts >around the world and have made a lot of friends just as the ham operators

Illegally. If it doesn't bother you, it should.

>There are probably more organized 11 meter Dx clubs than hams

There are something like 650,000 hams, just in the US...

> .I will bet >you there are even some hams that are on those freqs but wont admit it (you >guys know why) the DX is good..

Yeah, there might be. Can't imagine what the attraction would be, tho.

And in about 7 - 8 years from now, when sunspots hit their minimum, you-all won't be able to get out of your own back yards, while hams will be merrily working the world on 20, 30, 40, and 80 meters.

If you ever visit Europe there's a good alternative from PA0SSB in Holland.
He offers a nice full coverage, 100W HF kit for reasonable prices. But I guess he won't send it to you since the shipping costs will be as much as the price for the rig itself and he wouldn't be able to offer you after sales service. You can see the picture of the designer and the rig itself on the next link: http://home.pi.se/sm0fly/pa0ssb.htm

Since when is caring about other people instead of $$$ a bad thing?? I realize it has fallen largely out of vogue, what with the egocentric society that pervades these days. Life itself, let alone one's fellow human beings, has become virtually worthless.. a throwaway commodity, like a used razor... I don't know about you, or anyone else, but this scares me to death. I'll stick to the old ways, where people matter. If ever comes a time where money takes precedence in my life over another human being, it will be time for me to make my exit.

Take care, and stay well.

Well, to be honest, most tubes are easy to get. Pretty much all the standard audio tubes are in current production, compactrons and most other TV tubes are a glut on the market, and most standard radio tubes have supply greatly exceeding demand.

The problem are some of the more obscure tubes, and sweep tubes.

And sweep tubes are a special case, and the worst possible case, and they are the problem with the FT-101. Because they were dirt cheap, designers used them (and lots of folks converted commercial gear to use them). TV set tube production was very high and there were plenty of sweep tubes out there.

Then tube TV sets stopped being made, but there were still huge numbers of sweep tubes in the warehouses.

The problem came with appliance operators who didn't know how to neutralize their finals, people who ran the finals at outrageously high levels, and the illegal CB linear crowd who often ran huge numbers of badly matched parallel tubes.

And these people collectively destroyed most of the stock of sweep tubes out there, and now they sell for outrageous amounts of money. THAT is the problem more than anything else. Tubes that should have lasted for years of operation that only lasted for hours.

Georgie Girl W2ZB
(The Seekers)

Hey there, Georgie girl,
Waddling down the street so fancy free,
Nobody you meet could ever see
The pervertedness there -- inside you.
Hey there, Georgie girl,
Why can't you let all the boys just pass you by?
Could it be you just don't try,
Or is it the women's clothes you wear?

You're always window shopping, but never stopping to buy;
So shed those boa feathers and fly -- a little bit.
Hey there, Georgie girl,
There's another Georgie deep inside.
Bring out all the manlove you hide,

And oh, what a change there'd be.
The world would see
A new Georgie girl.

(Instrumental bridge)

Hey there, Georgie girl,
Dreamin' of the someone you could be,
Life is a reality;
You can't always run away.

Don't be so scared of changing and rearranging yourself;
It's time for putting slurping cum on the shelf -- a little bit.
Hey there, Georgie girl,
There's another Georgie deep inside.
Bring out all the teenboy love you hide,
And oh, what a change there'd be.
The world would see
A new Georgie girl.

Ad lib and fade:
(Hey there, Georgie girl.)
Wake up, Georgie girl.
(Hey there, Georgie girl.)
Go away, Georgie girl.
(Hey there, Georgie girl.)
Try and keep that job, Georgie girl.

Melissa...

Elecraft is about to introduce a 100-watt output amp for the K2 transceiver. It is in beta test now and I'll bet shows up for sale at Dayton. It will be built into the top so won't increase the size at all, and becomes an integral part of the radio. If you want to go back to QRP, just pull the amp and reinstall the original top which contains the battery and auto-tuner options. Takes about 3 minutes to make the change. (There will be an autotuner for the AMP as well.)

Also, bear in mind that the K2 has a receiver that will compete with the best commercial rigs available today... WAY beyond Heathkit's wildest dreams. The ARRL said it handles close-in QRM better than ANY receiver ever tested in their lab.

THE K2 IS NOT YOUR "TYPICAL" KIT RADIO! In A/B comparisons, I have never heard any station --under any conditions-- on my IC-756PRO that I couldn't hear at least as well on the K2, and I have been able to copy a few on the K2 that were unintelligible on the PRO. And the PRO heard a few I couldn't pull out on the FT-1000D I used to own.

The K2 feature set is outstanding and it's fun to build.

3656. Amateur License examination question

I had an Amateur Radio license in Australia many years ago (VK4AFE). Now I am living in the USA and wouldn't mind taking up the hobby again. I've taken some on-line sample exams and passed both Technician and General, but failed Extra (64%). I know I would have to brush up the Code.

Now the question: Can I take the Technician, General and Extra exams one after the other on the same day, if the examiners conduct the exams in that order, and worry about the Code exam later (or take the Code exam without having to worry if I don't pass it)? Or do I have to pass the Code exam before I can take the General exam?

The code requirement is 5 w.p.m.

> Now the question: Can I take the Technician, General and Extra exams one > after the other on the same day, if the examiners conduct the exams in

Yes. That's a lot of questions to know, given the size of the question pools.
But here's the requirements:

Technician: 35 questions, minimum passing is 26 answered correctly.
General : 35 questions, minimum passing 26 answered correctly.
5 wpm Code element
Extra: 50 questions, minimum passing 37 answered correctly.

>and worry about the Code exam later (or take the Code exam > without having to worry if I don't pass it)?

Once an element is passed, the Certificate of Successful Completion of Examination (CSCE) is issued by the VE team and it is good for 1 year (365 days from that date).

>Or do I have to pass the Code exam before I can take the General exam?

See above for that. You'd get the Technician license and have a year to try to pass the code if you passed the General theory.

I'd space it out, instead of going for it all at once.

Yes and no. You may take the written exams in order without regard to having passed the code, all on the same day. If you fail an element and retake during the same session, the ARRL will charge an additional test fee for the retake. Other VEC's may have a different policy. Regardless, since you won't have the code element, you will get a Technician license (assuming element 2 is passed) + element credit that is good for 365 days for any other element passed.

Unlike the 10wpm Australian requirement, the U.S. code speed is only 5wpm. If you remember anything, you might be able to pass even without a refresher.

Do NOT SAY "one year." That is not true. It is 365 days, which is NOT equal to a year when February 29th is included.

People who think it's a year get nailed in leap years with expired CSCE's if they wait until the last minute.

3667. (UPDATE, LONG) Auto-FAQ Sent to Over 22,500 rec.radio.amateur.misc Posters

Newsgroup: rec.radio.amateur.misc
Date: 2002-04-04 01:36:08 UTC
From: "Paul W. Schleck" <pschleck@novia.net> Message-ID: <3cabad83$0$36758$45beb828@newscene.com>
Source record: 78760

In September of 1996, I started mailing an introductory message to all new posters to rec.radio.amateur.misc. This is accomplished via a special Perl script originally written by comp.infosystems.www.* FAQ maintainer Tom Boutell, who uses it on comp.infosystems.www.authoring.html, to send each poster such a message once, and only once, to a given E-mail address. It runs from a Unix cron job on my host every morning at 2 AM and queries my local news server via NNTP for the headers of any new articles posted to this newsgroup. About 7 new posters on average receive the message each day.

Though substantially silent-running and low-maintenance, the script has suffered from three minor "oops" events:

1. Some as-yet undetermined file write error (possibly from a quota hard-limit on the system) truncated my previous-poster file to zero, and accidentally sent the message twice to a small number of recipients (essentially the posters of articles to rec.radio.amateur.misc in my local news spool on Friday, February 19, 1999).

2. A bug in Version 1.2.1 of the Typhon news server (installed by my ISP on or about April 3, 1999) which caused "References" instead of "Reply-To" headers to be returned when requested by the script using NNTP protocol, thus addressing the automated welcome messages to Message-ID contents. This mildly annoyed one postmaster who redirected to his mailbox all E-mail addressed to his domain, but with invalid mailboxes (e.g., the numeric, pseudo "addresses" used for Usenet article Message-ID headers).

3. On October 7, 2001, an individual posted a message to rec.radio.amateur.misc announcing an E-Bay auction of "Sylvania Tubes" with a From: address of a mail2news gateway. This caused the reply message to be posted to the newsgroup, mildly annoying a couple of readers who misunderstood the E-mail message to be a regular posting.

In each case, the problem was easily diagnosed, fixed, and enhancements were made to the script to ensure that the problem would not happen again.

Here are the milestones in terms of number of recipients, and the date each milestone was attained:

Recipients: Date: Average Recipients/Month (approx.):

0 September 21, 1996 N/A
5,000 July 5, 1997 625
7,500 December 7, 1997 500
10,000 June 2, 1998 420
12,500 December 20, 1998 420
15,000 September 29, 1999 280
17,500 May 30, 2000 310
20,000 April 7, 2001 250
22,500 April 3, 2002 220

Note that the rate is tapering off (likely following an exponential saturation curve).

This project was drawn into controversy in January, 2002 when an individual from Germany using the name Andreas "Tekman" attempted to reply to the message. He usually participates in the sci.electronics.* newsgroups, but had just crossposted to rec.radio.amateur.misc for the first time. Replies to the message are quite welcome, and should pass right through to my mailbox. However, in this case, the correspondent was sending from an E-mail address in a domain that was already "blacklisted" by Spamcop for sending too much SPAM (unsolicited, off-topic commercial E-mail). I was unaware that my ISP, Novia Internetworking, had begun to block E-mail using the Spamcop blacklist as a service for its 4,000+ customers, and thus bounced the individual's reply. In response to this bounce, the individual posted to the newsgroup multiple times with harsh criticism, profanity (e.g., "FOAD"), and even a death threat against me. Attempts at public explanation by me were not well received by this individual, and I was accused of blocking all replies to the message and lying about it (both untrue). Obviously the death threat was never made good, I was made aware of the potential problem of blocking of replies via the Spamcop blacklist, and the individual eventually changed his E-mail address to another account at a (presumably) non-rogue site not blacklisted by Spamcop.

As a result of this criticism and public controversy, I offered to conduct a "straw poll" by a neutral third party. My experiences are that this project operates with the overwhelming support of the newsgroup readership, but my experiences aren't verifiable proof (as the neutral third party pointed out in a post to the newsgroup). During the Andreas "Tekman" controversy and threats, both Andreas "Tekman" and an anonymous poster with the pseudonym "Stagger Lee" asserted that this project did not have the support of the newsgroup readership and should cease. A third-party vote-taker was recruited and terms for the straw poll were proposed. I also agreed to abide by the results. After two weeks, neither Andreas "Tekman" nor "Stagger Lee" agreed to the terms, nor suggested terms of their own, nor did anyone else on the newsgroup do so, and the matter was dropped. If anyone on the newsgroup still wishes to assert that this project is not supported by the newsgroup readership, or should be stopped for any other reason, they can follow up to this post, and we can reapproach the idea of a straw poll.

Here's a breakdown of other recipient's reactions to the message over the last 66 months. All feedback was politely replied to, usually with a version of the rebuttal arguments given below:

Less than a dozen recipients strongly objected to it. Spamming and junk mail seems to have rubbed sensibilities raw with regard to receiving unsolicited, possibly automatically-sent, E-mail. Also, there's obviously just no pleasing some recipients, including the one person who angrily replied that he did not ask to be welcomed to this newsgroup (sigh!). Two others (out of the 22,500 recipients), accused me of illegal SPAM and threatened to have my account, my ISP, and possibly my ISP's upstream connection if necessary, "permanently removed from the Internet." As described above, someone even made a public death threat against me. Since none of these threats came to pass, I can only assume that they were disingenuous (Hint: If there truly is a problem, please let me know about it, but I cannot constructively respond to misrepresentations, insults, and threats). I choose to endure this occasional abuse because experiences in other newsgroups demonstrate such automated welcome messages to be "just barely redeeming" in terms of dealing with the massive influx of new users.

Another dozen or so recipients thought it was a bit wordy (the message needs to be "one size fits all" and some recipients might be very confused without some background explanation; the message attempts to get to the point as quickly as possible, and some careful pruning and rewording of the message has helped reduce complaints, but pragmatically the message is also optimized to minimize the amount of followup correspondence I have to engage in). No one has replied complaining about the length of the message in at least two years.

A handful of recipients complained that they did not post to the newsgroup (they did, usually by following up to a crossposted article in another newsgroup). In this case, the message was at least useful to warn users about such unintended crossposting. An increasing number of cross-posts (leading to followup postings) among rec.radio.amateur.misc, rec.radio.amateur.equipment, and rec.radio.swap caused a few more incidents of this type about two years ago, but these seem to have gone away as well

A handful of recipients didn't read the entire message, or didn't understand it, and asked to be taken off the mailing list (of course, this isn't a mailing list, and removing their address from my database would have the opposite of the desired effect). Two people even asked to be removed from the database anyway, each stating that they never intended to post to the newsgroup again (I honored their unusual requests). I have not received requests of this type in about a year.

A handful of recipients pointed out that they had been participating on the newsgroup for many years. It's possible that if you haven't posted in the last 66 months, or posted but the article didn't reach my local news spool, that you could potentially get this new user welcome message the next time you post. However, you will certainly not get it more than once to the same E-mail address. I have not noticed complaints of this type in about a year.

About one individual per month complimented me for sending it (which I appreciate).

The overwhelming majority did not respond, indicating one of several possibilities:

- they approve of it
- they disapprove, but not enough to bother replying
- the mail was misdelivered (I got a few bounces, often from deliberately munged From: or Reply-To: addresses to ward off SPAM)
- they don't care

So, my impression is that the project is at least a qualified success, and should continue in its present form. At the very least, it seems to be substantially non-controversial. Having primed the previous-poster database with over 22,500 E-mail addresses, the chances of bothering an experienced reader with an unneeded introductory message is greatly reduced, and will get even smaller with time.

I'd be interested in hearing your opinions on this project. I'd also like to solicit volunteers to initiate similar projects in some of the special-topic newsgroups (perhaps starting with my previous-poster database as a baseline, and modifying the message to contain pointers to the more topic-specific FAQ's and information; the .digital.misc, .homebrew, .equipment, and .policy newsgroups seem to be good candidates for a project of this type). Barring any objection, I may choose to do this myself in the near future.

For those who are curious, here is the current version of the message, slightly modified in response to feedback as the project progressed.

Hello,

This E-mail message is automatically sent to every new poster or cross-poster (as of September 21, 1996) to rec.radio.amateur.misc. It should be sent once, and only once, to each unique E-mail address. As the subject says, this is a welcome message. The Internet amateur radio community welcomes you to the newsgroups, including rec.radio.amateur.misc, and welcomes your input, opinions, and constructive participation. To help make you feel welcome, experienced participants like myself have chosen to systematically inform you, as a new poster, about useful information resources and user tips to help you get the most out of these newsgroups. I hope that you will consider this message in that spirit.

1. The news.announce.newusers newsgroup, moderated by Jon Bell, et al, contains a number of very informative articles providing an overview of net-etiquette, suggested writing styles for electronic forums, and other various do's and don'ts concerning Internet culture. ftp://rtfm.mit.edu/pub/usenet/news.answers/news/

2. The Guide to the rec.radio Newsgroups, originally written by Jay Maynard, K5ZC, is now maintained by Jeffrey Herman, KH6O. It provides an excellent overview of all of the USENET newsgroups devoted to amateur and CB radio. It may be accessed from:

3. The rec.radio.swap FAQ: A Guide to Buying and Selling on Usenet, also originally written by Jay Maynard, K5ZC, is now also maintained by Jeffrey Herman, KH6O. It contains a number of good pointers for reading and posting articles concerning the buying and selling of radio and radio-related equipment on the USENET newsgroup rec.radio.swap (which, with the sole exception of rec.radio.amateur.boatanchors for vintage equipment, is the only appropriate forum for such articles). It may be accessed from:

ftp://rtfm.mit.edu/pub/usenet/news.answers/radio/swap-guide

Please direct any submissions feedback, or administrivia regarding the above two resources to jeffreyh@hawaii.edu.

4. The national amateur radio society of the United States, the American Radio Relay League, has a presence on the Internet. You may access their comprehensive and informative home page at:

http://www.arrl.org/

(They also have information about amateur radio organizations in other countries.)

5. Read the newsgroup first to see if your question has already been answered. You may also view, and search for keywords in, older news articles (going all the way back to 1981) at the Google (formerly DejaNews) archive:

http://groups.google.com/

Many topics have been discussed before, often in great depth, but the articles have expired from your local news server. Services like Google allow Usenet a much longer "institutional memory" that can greatly benefit both new and experienced users.

6. If you do post to the newsgroup, give as many details as possible. After you post, read the newsgroup for a week or two to see all replies to your posting. If you wish, ask for responses by E-mail and offer to post a summary if others are interested in the answer to your question. Note that it is (almost without exception) inappropriate to post your article to all (or even a significant subset of) rec.radio.amateur.* newsgroups. Please pick only the most relevant newsgroups (usually no more than 2 or 3), and post your article as a simultaneous cross-post (check your newsreader documentation) so that only one article is propagated, and the article is only shown once in a newsreader.

7. Remember, USENET newsgroups are based on the idea of mutual aid. USENET only works if we put as much into it as we get out of it. Good luck with your experiences with amateur radio and the amateur-radio-related USENET newsgroups.

The author welcomes any and all constructive feedback concerning this message. Please direct all such feedback to pschleck@novia.net and retain the original subject (e.g., "Re: WELCOME to rec.radio.amateur.misc") in your reply.

I'd like to see how you arrive at 99.5%. Most interesting. I've got some co-workers who are CBers. All are legal 5 watts with one exception - a 50 watt amp in a truck. I certainly disagree with the multi-hundred watt and kw+ amps, but can understand (not legal, but I can understand) why he uses a small amp in the truck. Otherwise, when the F layer is working, he can't raise his base from 3 miles away. The folks I used to bunny hunt with (yes, 30 years ago) were all decent folks; quite coherent, I assure you. I was trying to talk a CBer at the time into getting into amateur radio; after all, he had his 1st class radiotelephone license (as did I; we both worked at WROC-TV in Rochester New York). He said he wasn't interested - and mentioned the code. Being a pretty good stone-breaker, I mouthed some Morse at about 20 WPM (pretty much max by mouth; I was good for 27 on a straight key and 50 plus on a keyer. Don't ask about that Vibroplex; I never could send well with that contraption), saying 'but Morse is easy'. I wish what followed had happened to you. Talk about my mouth hitting the floor. He responded 'I know it's easy, but I'm just not interested'!!!!!!! Turns out he was a high-speed code operator in the service! Ever since then, I have firmly believed that the amateur's attitude can either help someone into the fraternity - or forever turn them off. I have a pretty good idea which side you fit into.

Hey. It's not shameful to be temporarily out of work.
With your qualifications you will easily find a job elsewhere.
Like at McDonald's or Burger King, or even as a greeter at Wal-Mart. Go for it, enjuneer.

2 meter amp, up to 10 watts in, up to 40 out.

VHF Engineering made a line of good quality kits. I have one of their 2-mtr receivers that I still use as a monitor.

I wonder what dimmy's W-2 showed for "Wages, tips, and other compensation"? He said he was pulling down $93,000 big ones per annum, so that means that his W-2 should show, under "Federal income tax withheld" something in the area of $19,000 to $24,000.
How much do you want to bet that he didn't even earn $24,000 this year?
This means he can file the 1040EZ form since that is used for taxpayers that earn less than $400 per year in interest. He can't use the 1040 form cause he can't deduct his bar bills and Old Milwaukee purchases, unless he found a way to claim them as medical expenses.
How was work this year, dimmy?

Believe it or not, there are still places left in this world where people leave their front doors unlocked, even when no one is at home. I used to work in one of these areas, which is a small semi-rural community where everyone knows everyone and trust runs high among the locals. When people made appointments for me to come over to their houses and they couldn't be home, they would just say "the door is unlocked. He knows where and what needs to be done. There's a beer/soda pop in the refrigerator. Just tell him not to let the dog/cat out and pull the door shut when he leaves..

I knew a lot of the people on a first name basis, the dog in the backyard, seen people's hidden contraband, marijuana plants, etc, and virtually had free run of the whole doggoned area, pasturage, wooded areas, etc without having to worry about getting shot at for wandering into the wrong place..

Because my boss was a jerk, I left that job for another one "over the hill" in "civilisation" which offered a very substantial increase in pay, but I still miss the people and the laid back and virtually stress free work atmosphere which I had held onto for five years because in many ways it was worth more to me than all the money in the world..

Maybe that exists somewhere now, but the current risk is that the same openness will have you sitting behind bars when some doper whines to the police that you stole his dope. Did I say risk? That was a risk 20 years ago...its almost a norm these days that a serviceman left in the house has stolen something.
I hitchhiked the whole country in those days...I wouldn't dare hit a highway now. Things have indeed changed and thats a sad comment on our society. Its a great memory, tho.

KE4TEW, the infamous Tampa Turd, has been jamming twenty meters for the past 5 years from his cinder-block craphole in Tampa.Being a vicadin dealer and a drug addict does not leave him much concious time to jam hf, or much money to buy decent equipment. His wretched life consists mostly of posting juvinile comments from compuserve, the lamest dial-up on the net. More to come on this loser. No wonder his son killed himself.

More to come on both of these losers.

The FCC changed Georgie the drunks 610 for him, since he was so drunk he did not know his address.This is the location for the best amateur radio jammer the FCC ever produced:

RS is not going to stop selling small parts. they have discontinued several that were being used primarily for illegal purposes, what, I do not know. The part was a Quad Line Receiver (1488). But, for you guys that are serious, find a franchise store instead of a company store and they will usually cut you a deal.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU ARE ACCUSED OF CHEATING OR PLAGIARISM

1. You will probably feel angry at the person who accuses you, even though he or she is just trying to make your posts more honest. Do what you can to master your angry feelings so you won't say anything you later regret.

2. Answer questions honestly and cleanly.

3. Remember, there is an appeal process available to you. If the persons investigating the allegations against you seem unwilling to hear your side, you can always resort to lying and babbling.

4. Consider the evidence against you. Evidence does not have to be conclusive.
The burden of proof is based on the 'balance of probabilities' that is, if a reasonable person can say: "Based on what we found, you again plagiarized."

WHAT TO DO IF YOU ARE ACCUSED OF CHEATING OR PLAGIARISM
(go to www.plagiarism.org)

1. You will probably feel angry at the person who accuses you, even though he or she is just trying to make the academic environment more honest. Do what you can to master your angry feelings so you won't say anything you later regret.

2. Answer questions honestly. The instructor has an obligation to investigate and to try to determine the truth.

3. Remember, there is an appeal process available to you. If the instructor investigating the allegations against you seems unwilling to hear your side, you can appeal. Remember, too, that the burden of proof is on the University.

4. Consider the evidence against you. Evidence does not have to be conclusive.
The burden of proof is based on the 'balance of probabilities' that is, if a reasonable person can say: "Based on this evidence, cheating probably took place."

LONDON (Reuters) - Drink up that beer -- another will soon be whisked to the table thanks to a hi-tech pint glass that tells bar staff when it needs refilling.

Developed by a Japanese electronics company, the intelligent glass is fitted with a radio-frequency coil in its base and emits a signal to a receiver set in the table when it's empty, New Scientist magazine reported Thursday.

The iGlassware system works by coating each glass with a clear, conducting material, enabling it to measure exactly how much liquid has been sipped or guzzled.

When empty, the glass sends an electronic cry for more beer from the ham shack to wives equipped with hand-held computers on frequencies similar to those used by mobile phones

Gee, what happened? I thought you were from the "old school that put more value on kindness". Singapore is the latest to lower the telegraphy sending and receiving speed for full access to the amateur HF bands.

The Infocomm Development Authority (IDA) of Singapore has reduced the amateur licence code test speed in that country to 5-words per minute.

The Singapore Amateur Radio Transmitting Society (SARTS) has long recognised the worldwide issue of lowering the code requirement.

A meeting of SART members in 2000 had considered the issues.

The consensus of the SARTS membership was that is that IDA be approached and requested to initially reduce the examination test speed to 5wpm.

In the longer term SARTS, in line with IARU policy, supports an end to Morse code tests being an amateur licence examination requirement.

I had a guy wanting to buy this but, he backed out of the deal, so here goes again.

For Sale: Uniden Force table top repeater 450-470mhz. Built in duplexer.
My friend is a tech at a radio shop and he said this can dip down into the ham band.

The unit was taken out of service and replaced with a new MTR2000 repeater. The unit is in tip top condition and the only thing that this needs is crystals.

The model number is ARU251K. Since Uniden no longer services these units, they've turned it over to Relm. I contacted them and they sent me a file with complete schematics and alignment specs.

Price: $200 plus shipping COD or PrePay from Las Vegas.

I'm also from the "old school" that when someone doesn't know when to shut their smartassed mouth and ends up getting it shut for them, that they learn a valuable lesson and chalk it up to experience, but it appears that you come from the new breed of jerkoff punk that continues to mouth off and deliberately provoke others into an argument so that they can call the cops and try to have the guy arrested for knocking the living shit out of you..

I live in the San Francisco Bay Area. Zip me an e-mail and let me know when your in the area, cuz i'd love to eyeball with you. I get up to W7 land occasionally as well if you're in the Oregon/Washington area, but I wouldn't trust you as far as I could throw you cuz trash like you have no integrity.

Not to mention that you don't know what in the hell you're talking about..

I hear where you're coming from, and even though the area is full of potheads, this mentality is not at all prevalent. I worked there for five years and never even one time had a client call my honesty into question..

And I hate to disagree with you, but in the twenty four years that i've worked in this type of capacity in the San Francisco Bay Area and elsewhere, I can't count the times on one hand that any coworkers have been accused of stealing from a client..

The only time that I would pick up a hitchhiker would be if he was carrying a gas can, and even then I would exercise extreme caution. If I use bad judgement and get a knife or gun pulled on me, then we'll see how long it takes him to hand it over or throw it out the window after I floor the gas pedal and threaten to run into a concrete overpass abutment. If i'm gonna die anyway i've got absolutely nothing to lose, but he does..

The baby boomers aren't old enough for SS.
I come from the previous generation and just applied for SS and won't receive it for some months yet. They had it the best of basically any generation I've seen and they thought they had it the worst.

We have about another 8 years or so that they can still keep pumping money into the stock market until the numbers drop significantly.

After them the next generation was the "X" generation, or lost generation, I believe.
That was when we had the gas shortages (or was it still another generation later...once you retire, you seem to lose track of time) we started to recycle, move to cars that lasted and got good milage. Now we have huge SUVs and Trucks...actually they are selling more of those than cars and have been for at least three years.

The baby boomers were still in the time of "planned obsolescence". I had a Ford Mustang that actually rusted out by the time it was 6 months old. Pretty car...built like crap. The Ford company offered to stand behind it and pay half the cost of the repair...I could get it done for less than that at most autobody shops. Then the auto industry and unions couldn't understand why people started buying foreign.
I actually stayed with US cars until last fall when one of those imortal teenagers pulled out in front of my Transam with his invinciple SUV. I drove right through his door...The TAs wheels were big enough to put me over his frame. The only thing that saved his life was the massive door post on that GMC Jimmie. Shortened the TA up by about a foot and a half. Put the right front tire back into the firewall and there was no space left under the dash to get at the wiring because it drove the fire wall back so far. I wasn't even sore the next day. BTW, I only had time to leave about 12-15 feet of skid marks. I was punchy (and deaf) from the air bags for about half an hour.

The control head for the 2-meter rig was mounted on the dash. I stopped so quick, it layed down flat...Bent the metal right down to the plastic.

BTW, I had an FT101B and "thought" it had 6146s in it. Damn near got electrocuted off that rig due to a poor soldering job from the factory..

3726. 10 Meter Operation

Newsgroup: rec.radio.amateur.misc

From: unscore@mm2k.net
Message-ID: <9966df0f.0204050029.5b2b77cb@posting.google.com>

I'm just curious how the 10 meter band is right now? Propagation?

I've thought about getting my ticket for a long time now and have studied for it quite extensively but without the equipment or means to listen in on the band I don't know how things are going on the band right now.

For me with school tuition and other living expenses money is kind of tight right now so I was considering buying a cheap 10 meter radio (Pro-Star 400 28.000mhz to 29.699mhz) for my first radio to get a taste of what it's like. To be perfectly honest and I know this will get me some grief from some but I've been active on the CB band for a few years now and I'm sick and tired of trying to have a good DX skip QSO on channel 38 LSB with all the clowns around here and out there running insane ammounts of power totaly killing my chances to enjoy my hobby. I've read some reviews of the above radio and they say its not bad for the money and offers SSB, AM, FM, with some fairly decent features so I know the radio isn't on par with, oh, say a Yeasu? Kenwood? But what I'm asking is would it be enough for some DX QSO's on the ten meter band? I already have a fairly decent anntena setup so that's not much of a problem right now I just don't have the money for a good HF rig like most of you.

Any comments or opinions are welcome and greatly appreciated.

Thanks,
--Jackson

Interesting. I had a 1998 Mustang for over three years + 60k miles and didn't have a single problem with it. The best car I ever had. If my company didn't insist on giving me a company car, I never would have sold it...

3731. Bad transmit on VX-5R

Hello,

I recently started having problems with transmit on my VX-5R. When I transmit, on any band, at any power level, the radio sputters for just a moment and then stops transmitting. In addition, it seems like the noise floor for receive is very high. I've had issues using the scan function cause the noise is loud enough to break squelch; even on the max setting.

Anyway, a friend suggested that I might have a faulty ground on my SMA connector. I opened up the radio and there is no solder joint for the shield. It looks like the mounting assy. for the SMA is the ground. Also, the stinger looks to be properly soldered.

I'd greatly appreciate any suggestions.

Thanks,

Radio Shack seems to be removing slow moving items from the shelves even though these items are a high profit sale.

You can still buy whatever you want from RS. You just need to get hold of their commercial accounts catalog in which you'll find all the parts you've ever seen elsewhere. It's a separate catalog that you need to ask for. They may not even have one in stock but it can be had for the asking.

Hi Jackson --- 10M propagation is very good at the moment -- solar flux is up to 216 and right now (1510Z) the packet clusters show Finland, Lebanon, Greece, Turkey and many others being received in the USA on 10M.
Later today we will hear the Carribean, then later the Pacific and Asia.

During last week in the WPX contest it was possible to work 50 or 60+ countries in a weekend on 10Meters.

For a rig -- a used Kenwood, ICOM, Yaesu, Ten-Tec may be a better choice.
Compare power out, price, etc.
Good Luck on getting the ticket

Jackson,

You say that you are active on eleven meters now. Ten meters will have almost that same propagation as eleven, but ten will close a little before eleven, being higher in frequency.

To answer your basic question, almost any ten meter radio will work fine for casual use. But... The fact is that with the sunspots on a decline as they are now, both ten and eleven meters will be pretty quiet soon.

In my opinion, you would be better served working towards at least the General class license and getting a used HF rig. Believe it or not, many very good true HF rigs are available for about the cost of one of those "export radios".

I have here a Kenwood TS-120S that I bought at a hamfest for $300. I paid another fifty dollars for the matching power supply. I have used this rig for almost a decade with no problems.

As to licensing, you will have to get over the five WPM hump to get any HF access. With today's license structure, this means at least General class. No-code Technician class will give you access to VHF and above, but if DX is your interest, you will need the HF access granted by the General class ticket.

Good luck, the Morse requirement is really not that big a thing.

Hope to C U on the bands!

Radio Shack will continue to sell Diodes, Resistor's ect, they are in the process of remodeling all stores. To save space, all small parts are being sent back to Ft. Worth to be repackaged and will be sent back to the stores in a drawer type setup. Many new changes will be made during the year 2002 and this is one of them, currently they are doing away with car audio.

<GLENDALE, WV: The FCC requested July 11, 2000, that Roger L.
Wiseman, KC8JBO, retake the General examination elements under the supervision of an ARRL-VEC volunteer examiner team. Wiseman must appear for retesting by September 11, 2000, or his license will be canceled. Applicants appearing for re-examination are granted an Amateur Radio license consistent with the elements passed. The FCC had written Wiseman on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between Wiseman and another licensee that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Additionally, the FCC had sent Wiseman a Warning Notice last November in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters.>

Either you retook the test or you license would have been cancelled.

<GLENDALE, WV: The FCC sent a Warning Notice November 9, 1999, to General licensee Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, citing evidence that the licensee had been "deliberately and maliciously interfering with the radio operations of other licensed amateurs" on 20 meters. "This interference has occurred at various times in the last several months and includes broadcasting music and other unidentified transmissions," said a letter from FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth.
Hollingsworth warned that continued operation of the type described could result in a fine or license revocation proceeding, and he requested that the licensee contact him to discuss the allegations.>

July 11, 2000

Mr. Roger L. Wiseman

610 Glen Haven Avenue

Glendale, WV 26038-1302

SUBJECT: Amateur Radio license KC8JBO

Dear Mr. Wiseman:

Pursuant to Section 97.519(d)(2) of the Commission's Rules, 47 C.F.R.
Section 97.519(d)(2), the Commission has the authority to re-administer any examination element previously administered by Volunteer Examiners (VE's).
The Commission may either administer the examination itself, or under the supervision of a Volunteer Examiner Coordinator (VEC) or VE designated by the Commission.

Accordingly, we are requiring you to re-take the General Class Amateur Examination, (Elements 2, 3(A) and 3(B)) under the supervision of an American Radio Relay League Volunteer Examiner Coordinator. This examination must be completed on or before September 11, 2000. The required code speed that you must demonstrate is 5 words per minute.

Please be prepared to verify your current address and to present a photo identification. Pursuant to Commission rules, your license will be cancelled if you do not appear for re-examination. You will be granted an Amateur Radio license consistent with the elements you pass upon re-examination.

Sincerely,

W. Riley Hollingsworth

There it is. Plain as day, Roger. Ask and you shall receive, Curtain Boy.
Or is "interference and jamming" something that is OK to do?

Oh, I get it. The FCC and Riley Hollingsworth have implemented a new program whereby the FCC simply randomly retests Amateurs for no reason whatsoever other than to see that they are up to speed. Good try, Wogie, but no dice. I guess with you it all depends on what the meaning of "retest" is.

Read the letter, assuming you know how to read.
See the word "re-test" in the second sentence wogie? I quote from the letter, "Accordingly, we (meaning the FCC) are requiring you (that being pin head you wogie) to "re-take" the General Class Amateur Examination, (Elements 2, 3(A) and 3(B) under the supervision of an American Radio Relay League Volunteer Examiner Coordinator." Pretty clear wogie. Anyone else here besides wogie not grasp the fact that wogie was asked by the FCC to be retested?
I thought so. The FCC doesn't just ask you to be retested for without a good reason wogie, it was because of your actions of jamming on the ham bands that prompted the retest. Spin it any way you want but it won't fly, you remain the laughing stock of ham radio and the newsgroup. Now go cry on mamma's shoulder wogie and Good evening all. Looks like the SX-88 bezel project is on track and on schedule. Initial price estimates are listed below and include priority shipping to U.S. addresses.

30+ units = $190 each
20-29 units = $210 each
10-19 units = $285 each
6-9 units = $490 each

As mentioned before the final product will be black anodized. The fabricator will create one unit as a sample and provide it to verify fitting to the panel, glass fitting and all the other points to be considered while determining if the model is acceptable from all sides and fits. The fabricator said there will be a tiny radius at the inside point of the bezel openings. When I get pictures of the sample unit I will provide digital photos. I'll post them on a web site for all to review.

If you have any additional questions please let me know. I will be glad to add your name to the list of interested parties.

Had one of these "in the day". It was absolutely the finest rig I had ever used, and I've used my share. The DSP worked like a charm - really cleaned up the audio. Not too big either - smaller than the Cobra 2000.
Closer to the Uniden/President Washington in size. Closer to the 2000 or a good Saturn in performance.

Just received the Fox-Tango Newletters library. I am interested in performing several of the mods listed, starting with the doubly balanced mixer in the receiver, using the MC1496. Although no circuit board patterns are disclosed in ANY of the volumes, I believe I have enough information from the schematics and parts layouts to construct the mixer unit. Does anyone have experience in fabricating their own mixer boards and could provide suggestions? How much difference does this mod make in the receiver, which seems poor on 10/15 meters at present? Several experimenters mention IMD problems due to the IC used. Any better substitutions?

Any other mod suggestions would be appreciated.

Thanks,

3773. Custom HU install

I have a question about an install. I have the JVC kd-sh 707 and had it installed by a shop in my 92 accord... however, I don't like how the face sticks out from the surrounding dash. I really don't like the grey trim around the face. So here is my question, it seems like some installs have the HU set back further into the dash and without the trim... (so that all you see is the removable face set into the surrounding dash) I really would like to do that with my install... how do you do that? It seems like you would need a kit that fits further out in the dash so that the HU will be relativly further back... and then do you just remove the trim and toss it? Is this something a realtive novice could do?

Thanks,

first it is not necessarily "patriotic" to fall for some mass media

Of course there is ALWAYS the one self-righteous individual who feels that his or her outlook on life is the only yardstick by which to live and that the rest of us should mewlingly cowtow to the Liberal frame of mind.

This whole business about the parasite's death is getting quite silly!

That coffin has been shuttling back and forth across London faster than a whore's nickers go up and down!

What's the point? It's just a lump of wood with a bit of fairground ribbon adorning it.

We know nothing of the other 1643 people who died on the same day. Their funerals are a matter of privacy and private grief for the associated families.

A pity that the family of parasites can't behave in the same way.

Lilibet Windsor as head of state, is just a woman in employment. (Although anybody who takes her work home and expects her own family members to address her as "Ma'am" is clearly a case for psychiatric attention). There are many other women in employment in this country, and one who is much, much more important to me is the woman who cleans the lavatories at work. I know which one I'd miss more if the work ceased.

Therefore, the Queen's job is less important to the country than cleaning the lavatory, so why all the fuss just because her mum has died? I wouldn't make a fuss if the lavatory cleaner's mum died, and neither would I if the previous incumbent of that essential post died.

Sic transit gloria Mundi.

Roger has his own reality within which things are as Roger wants them to be; not as they are.

This insulates him from all sorts of unpleasant things, such as his yes, it was some silly notes about improving FT-101 using MC1496P and this was the reason for buying FT101B, but it later turned out that MC1496P has an IP3 of -20dBm which would not be an improvement at all

Have borrowed several FT-Newsletters from DK3UZ to look at possible improvements for FT-7 and FT-902, but didn't find anything useful, most of the mods were more based on feeling than based on practical experience

You *ucking guys are a bunch of *##hole on these news groups.Always cutting someone up instead of trying to tell them that the price may be to high or try to help them out.You are the one that buy it for a dollar and sell it for 50.00.So rather than critisize someone,why don't you try to encourage them and try to give them an idea of a going price.Is that hard to do??
Go on Ebay and you pay tripple the prices.No wonder why you see more FA on here than FS.
So if all you want to do is jump down someones throat and make yourselfs look like idiots,don't even make a response to me unless you want to help or buy.
I also buy a lot of these groups and I don't ask for much.I try to get what I got in the item.Some of you out there have sold and bought from me and have had good deals.
Again, keep your yap shut or try to help out rather than bitch.

Yes, I think I agree here. In fact, upon re-reviewing the Newsletters, someone mentioned that the original MOSFET's were actually better than the 1496 in most cases. Good point! However, not to sound like I'm contradicting myself, I have an unused 1496 sitting here along with parts boxes with all the parts needed to construct the mixer. I think I'll try it anyhow and see what happens. The receive is weak on the higher bands, especially 10 meters, and the bleed from close stations is terrible. I need to try something.

I'm not sure what opinion I have of the Newsletters at this point. Seems like a lot of experiments were tried and failed but others were successful. And at least some of the content does seem theoretical rather than "practical".

Hi ALL

I have 5 articles written by g3LLL in Ham Radio today (a Uk magazine now out of print).
These articles are well written and give much info on maintaining and repairing the FT101 range.

I think he had a double balanced mixer mod which proved succesful, and he alo designed an rf clipper for the early models without speech processing.

I have heard of the ft news group and would like to know how to get information to obtain the newsletters library.

I have a copy of the ft101 series service manual on a cd.

I also own 3 FT101E's. 1 works 100% and is in mint condx, the second one is 90% ready, the third is 80 % ready I bought the latter 2 a for spaers but unfortunately they appear to be fixable .

I also own a sommerkamp ft277B (ft101B again bought for spares) which is 60 % restored to working order but I need a vfo knob to make it complete. I am in need of 6js6c valves and i don't suppose i am the only one.

I am also restoring an ftdx401 but i am short of 6kd6 valve. they and the 6js6c's are getting as rare as rocking horse manure in the uk.

If anyone has any bits to swap or buy im interested.

to begin with, you are posting in a group that is inappropriate for this (rec.radio.cb).

secondly, that particular radio is nearly 10 years old (as the line was discontinued in 1992) and I have several here that I paid less than $150.00 each for them (including accessories).

you are asking a bit much.

I've used douzens for MC1496P and MC1596P for several projects, also S042P, but it is better devices around. Just got some SL6440, and they have high IP3, so I don't understand a reason for using a bad device

In fact I don't see any point to waste time on FT-101/B or FT-221 or FT-225 which are all made to same principles and suffers from bad carrier oscillator leakage which upset AGC,. So without any chance of good audio quality it is no point to waste the time,....but somebody had a point: "It is a good transmitter". I usually prefer to hear what the opposite stations says, but it is different opinions about that

I spent a week trying to find the reason for the problem with FT-101B, but never succeeded, later tried it with FT-221, and withing a week I managed to make only very inferior improvements. Although I had very sensitive RF voltmeter available I couldn't trace what really caused this radiation of carrier signal from the oscillator to an early stage of IF, og possibly RF mixer. You can remove the carrier connection to the product detector and still receive ssb signals as normal.

it was also a discussion concerning replacing diodes in product detector to reduce noise. I never really understood what was the point, it seems ridiculous to me.

Actually, he's right. It is a bit pricey, but hopefully you'll find some new ham that will think it's worth it. It is a very durable HT.

Sorry if it sounded like I was criticizing Technomage. It was not

I am in need of information for a part on my Texscan AL-51 Spectrum Analyzer. The 1 to 2 ghz oscillator is dead and I traced the problem to a stack of four tuning (vericap) diodes with a part number of MDT606. I have not been able to locate the part number or a cross reference to this part. Might anyone out there have information on the defective part; or perhaps an extra part (or even the oscillator module itself)? Gladly pay reasonable costs. Please respond to my email address. well, you mentioned battery packs and the radio. nothing else. perhaps if you had put more emphasis on details (such as number of battery packs, other accessories) then I would probably have not judged so quickly.

Still, my more recent purchase was of a ft-470 with an nc-29 quick charger, a wallwart slow charger, 2 battery packs, speakermic and car/battery charger unit/adaptor for $145.00 (4 months ago).

the radio was in reasonably good shape all around.

I pointed out a common sense point. if you don't like it, oh well (TS).

the other groups were fine. but being a HAM myself, I find it rather unusual to post a forsale of AMATEUR EQUIPMENT in a CITIZENS BAND RELATED newsgroup. What? you want to encourage someone to buy it and then use it without a license?

Hey, Curtain Boy. You still leaving those tell-tale mucous tracks on your mommy's picture window as you peek from behind the drapes? You never know, do you, Curtain Boy who will be pulling up in front of your house to visit you?

Hi All,

Technial Topics in Radcom (RSGB) covered the problems of FT101 and strong signals and also offered a solution that I carried out and found to be very effective on my FT101B.

Details are August 1979 P739 & October 1979 P938.

Further details on request.

I can DX on CB all I want... legally.

So, what's your problem with DXing... who gets hurt?
Here in the UK, DXing is legal, it was never illegal. As long as you are using legal equipment to do it, no problem.

The signal doesn't stop dead just because the US law says so, whether two people decide to speak or not does not make any difference, the signal does not suddenly decide to intefere with any other service, just because someone replies from outside that distance.

The signal will travel as far as it wants to, regardless of any laws.
Do US CBers have to give their location with every transmission, so that people hearing them can decide whether the law says that they have to be ignorant and not reply to them?
Do you have to give any details at all when transmitting?
Do the FCC give out charts or maps, so you can check the distance?
Can a mobile CBer be expected to check the distance between them and any signal they hear, before replying?

Let's face it, the distance rule was pretty stupid and virtually unenforceable to begin with. But to give CBers 12 Watts SSB on HF, then make DXing illegal... that was ultimate stupidity.
At least our "Radiocommunications Agency" had the sense to remove the dumb rules that were put in place, such as the antenna height and length rules that encouraged homebase CBers to use small antennas close to the ground... those that obeyed the law were extremely likely to intefere with every electronic device in the area, and often did.

I never heard of anyone, ever being prosecuted under those antenna rules, yet they ended up being almost totally ignored before they were scrapped.
Has anyone, ever been prosecuted under that distance rule?

Brainbuster.

Not where I am.
Maybe 99.5% of the residents in your area are "dimwits, fools, lawbreakers, and simpletons". Maybe you should consider moving... unless you fit in where you are.

But then, it depends upon what you define as "lawbreakers"... have you never broken any law. Remember, "the law is the law", break any law and you too are a lawbreaker.
This includes speeding, jay walking, littering, driving with defective lights or other defects, driving with uncorrected defective vision.
There are laws on the books that most people do not know about... ignorance may be bliss, but it is not above the law. I have heard that a city in Yorkshire (England) still has a law against sneezing in public... and you can be flogged for breaking that law.

Check this out...
http://www.dumblaws.com/
Some of these laws may be dumb, but break them (even if accidental), and you are a "lawbreaker" too.

Is this meant to scare people out of disagreeing... disagree, and you will be labelled.
I have certificates to show that I am not a "dimwit, fool, or simpleton"... as do many other CBers. I rate official certificates rather higher than your elitist arrogant opinion.

> I, too, have helped any number of people into amateur radio

Not with that attitude. Calling people "dimwits, fools, lawbreakers, and simpletons" is not helpful.
That is the attitude that is putting people off radio.

If you really don't like CBers, then stop the cross posting to a CB group... and take another Valium.

Very Well said! I agree 100%. Why slam of "flame" someone when we should try and point them in the right direction. Naturally they will try and get top dollar...who wouldn't, or maybe they really do not know the going price.

Lighten up people...it's only a hobby and nobody is twisting your arm to buy the equipment!

Is there available anywhere a scorecard listing names, calls, and brief bios of these individuals -- each of them makes valuable contributions to amateur radio and to their communities it seems as though they should be honored in some way.

Just wondering.

I guess that running 600 to 1000 watts illigally is alright with you. Try looking at the 4th or 5th harmonics of those amplifiers. The 5th harmonic Ch 19, 27.185 MHz, is 135.925 MHz. Does this frequency ring any bells??? This is the topend of the aircraft air to ground frequencies. How would you like to be a pilot trying to make an approach into Philadelphia International Airport when the weather is bad and listening for an airtraffic controllers instructions and the next thing you hear is "Breaker 19, How about a Smokie report?" The majority of these illegal amplifiers are transmitting on frequencies other than the frequencies that they were intended to. I spent 16 hours in 2 nights just riding up and down the New Jersey Turnpike and about 95% of the trucks that passed me either north or southbound made my spectrum analyzer and DF equipment just light up. The rest stop at exit 7 of the turnpike should have a sign posted saying " CAUTION RF RADIATION HAZARD" posted.

Don't try to justify the illegal operation of amplifiers on the CB bands. You might want to read FCC rules on CB. The original intent of CB was just to talk locally.

By the way I do work for the FAA in RFI investigation.

Looks like Riley has put the little twerp "Rambo" Dan, W4NTI. in the doghouse. Great!! he probably fits into the smaller size with great comfort.. This Loose Cannon on the Deck has threatened people too long with his threats of destruction and death.. Sit in that little duct taped house and Growl "Rambo" See if "PorkButt" can spring you out with his millions, laf laf laf, or mabbe arf arf arf.... ho ho ho

Looks like W4NTI has really stepped into a pile of shit with Riley Hollingsworth. Riley must have paid close attention to the tape of Dan, AKA,"RAMBO", telling everyone that he was going to cut their fucking throats.
yes Dan did try to do this once to his Korean wife as he chased her around the kitchen with a knife that would have made Davie Crockett proud.
Now ole Dan is just upset because his old mentor "Porkbutt" is still in radio prison with the FCC. yes, you guys remember "Porkbutt", the X

Brainbuster, although the classic "relativism" argument makes lots of habitual criminals feel good about themselves, the problems with that line of thinking are glaringly obvious. For example, it's OK to speed 130 mph through a school zone because, after all, everyone has broken a law at one time or another? Or because there are silly laws, any law that you don't feel like obeying is ALSO silly? Nonsense.

Use your brain, Brainbuster.

An AMA is a WW-II "handie talkie" that looks just like

Amateur Radio Newsline™ Report 1286 - April 5 2002

Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1286 with a release date of Friday, April 5th, 2002 to follow in 5-4-3-2-1.

The following is a Q-S-T. Australian radio regulators say no to I-LINK and the NCVEC says its time to revamp Element 2. These stories are first on Amateur Radio Newsline report number 1286 coming your way right now.

(Billboard Cart Here)

INTERNATIONAL: I-LINK NOT LEGAL IN AUSTRALIA

One of the very popular internet based linking protocols appears to be illegal to use in Australia. This as the Australian Communications Authority issues a finding against I-Link. Q-News Graham Kemp, VK4BB, has the background:

There are two competing systems being used in ham radio to link repeaters over the Internet. One is called I-LINK and the other is I-R-L-P.

I-R-L-P stands for the Internet Radio Linking Project. It was developed in Canada by Dave Cameron, VE7LTD. It's aim is to link ham radio systems separated by long distance over the Internet without the use of expensive eased lines or satellites. I-R-L-P uses Voice-Over-IP software to link radio sites around the world. But I-R-L-P uses its own custom interface board and software suite running on a Linux platform. And that's why many hams have opted for an alternative called I-LINK.

I-LINK does everything that I-R-L-P does in linking repeaters, but it does not require a computer running Linux or any proprietary hardware interface. The needed software is available to anyone. It runs on a P-C and anyone can have it in their computer. Even non-hams. And that is what seems to be bothering our regulatory body, the A-C-A. It says that the widespread and open availability of I-LINK could make it possible for non hams to get on the air.

Over the past few weeks, much comment has been made regarding the legality or otherwise of I-LINK here in Australia. To clarify the A-C-A position, let me quote in part from a letter by John Martin the Federal Technical Advisory Chairman.

"There should be no issue with I-LINK because the A-C-A has made it clear that it must be impossible for anyone to gain access to an amateur transmitter by any means other than on-air working one of the stations that is connected to the link. The only system which can comply with this is I-R-L-P."

This action by our A-C-A appears to not sitting well with I-LINK proponents in other nations. Some fear the decision here in V-K could bring similar action by other communications regulators in their parts of the world.

VK's National Society, the Wireless Institute of Australia's President Ernest Hocking VK1LK along with WIA/ACA Liaison team member Gilbert Hughes VK1GH met with the ACA Thursday 28 March to discuss the current situation.

Hocking: “In order to address this situation the ACA have agreed to develop an information paper in conjunction with the WIA ACA liaison team. This paper will aim to make clear the criteria under which Internet linking can take place. The paper will not endorse specific software or systems. Rather it will provide clear guidance on the conditions that need to be met for the operation of such linked systems to remain legal within the the Radio Communications Act.”
--

It was agreed that every effort would be made to develop the paperwithin a period of 4 - 6 weeks. WIA President VK1LK has called on the Ham population of VK to "ask for your patience over the next few weeks whilst this document is being developed".

From Q-News Australia, I'm Graham Kemp, VK4BB, reporting for the Amateur Radio Newsline.

Articles describing I-LINK recently appeared in both CQ and QST Magazines. No matter. Basically the Australian Communications Authority has said IRLP is O-K but I-Link has to go. At least for now. (Q-News)

RADIO REGULATIONS: FCC PROPOSES TO STRENGTHEN RULES AGAINST REPETITIVE APPLICATIONS

The FCC has proposed changing its application rules for all wireless radio services--including the Amateur Radio Service--in an effort to expand the scope of its current ban on repetitious applications. Newsline’s Bruce Tennant, K6PZW, has more:

The ARRL Letter reports that an FCC Notice of Proposed Rule Making released March 20th seeks to modify section 1.937 of its rules. This, to prohibit the filing of all applications that are substantially similar to applications the agency denied or dismissed with prejudice within the previous 12 months.

The term “with prejudice” means a legal issue or court case that is dismissed for good reason and the plaintiff is barred from bringing another action on the same claim. And, if the FCC gets its way, WT Docket No. 02-87 will bring a rules change that might prohibit a handful of applications filed by new and renewing hams where a similar or identical application was denied in the past 12 months.

The FCC cites the pending license request by Herbert L. Schoenbohm, ex-KV4FZ, as an example of a repetitious application. Schoenbohm's amateur license renewal was finally denied in 2000, when the US Supreme Court refused to hear the case. His authority to operate as a radio amateur expired in January 2001.

Then, last April, Schoenbohm applied for a new Amateur Radio license and passed the General exam. The FCC has designated that application for hearing, to determine, in part, if Schoenbohm deserves to be a Commission licensee.

The FCC says that such cases consume significant resources to re-litigate. Especially since they involve identical issues and the same applicants very close in time.

What about routine issues like dismissed vanity applications? The FCC says that they would not be impacted in any way. For vanity license applications, the FCC now allows these applicants to correct the mistakes and file again. The FCC says that it will continue to do so if the proposed rule change is adopted.

For the Amateur Radio Newsline, I’m Bruce Tennant, K6PZW

Comments on WT Docket No. 02-87, are due 30 days from the publication of the proposed rule in the Federal Register. Reply comments will be due 45 days after publication. (ARRL)

NAMES IN THE NEWS: KB2GSD TO PITCH FOR FREE AIRTIME

Walter Cronkite, KB2GSD, will be the pitch man for a new campaign taking on broadcasters for not offering enough affordable or free airtime to federal candidates. This, even though the airwaves are owned by the American public.

The coalition sponsoring the Cronkite narrative said that its kicking off its grass-roots drive following passage of the landmark campaign finance reform legislation. This legislation spared broadcasters from having to offer deep discounts to federal candidates.

Under current federal law, broadcasters are required to give discounts to political candidates. However the actual rate can vary depending upon the time it is slated to air. (Publisged reports)

EMERGING TECHNOLOGY: SMART FENCES

Smart fences are possible. So say Pennsylvania State College researchers who are using acoustic technology to turn a simple chain-link fence into an intrusion detection system.

To make the system work, a single strand of galvanized steel wire, a system of springs and weights and some inexpensive ground sensors make the fence sensitive to intruders. Among parties interested in the technology are the U.S. military, airports and oil companies. (PSC News Release)

A NASA communications satellite launched into orbit on March 8th has developed a problem with its onboard supply of propellant. The trouble is delaying the Tracking and Data Relay Satellite-I from reaching its ultimate destination, a circular orbit about 22,300 miles above Earth's equator. A NEWSLINE FOLLOW-UP: THE POLITICS OF 11 METERS - PART 2: “A NATIONAL RESOURCE CALLED REACT”

Last week we told you that there has only been one truly successful organization with any political ties to 11 meters. In Part 2 of his special report on the not so political side of 11 meter Class D CB, Amateur Radio Newsline’s David Black, KB4KCH, takes a look at REACT.

A long known name in CB radio is REACT, or Radio Emergency Associated Communications Teams. REACT's mission statement stresses public safety communications, assisting individuals, groups and government agencies.

The stated goal: To save lives, prevent injuries and give assistance wherever and whenever needed. The group promotes establishing a monitoring network of trained volunteer citizen-based communicators and using all means available to deliver their message. REACT, it seems, has succeeded on both counts.

The idea of using CB radio in an organized way for emergency communications was born in a mid-winter Chicago snowstorm. It happened after CB radio was used to summon assistance for a young family with a very sick child whose car was stuck on an expressway. That was in the winter of 1962 when CB was really still in its infancy.
